County delays development

SANFORD — Seminole County commissioners delayed a decision on whether to allow Battle Ridge Co. to develop a 296-acre site south of Lake Jesup into homes and condominiums.

About two-thirds of the site is wetlands and floodplain. Residents of the nearby Black Hammock area oppose the project, saying it was too much for the rural area. County development analysts agreed, although noting it was adjacent to the Central Florida GreeneWay, normally a good place for dense development.

Commissioners decided a study of development trends in the area are needed, a vote to hold off their Battle Ridge decision for six months.

Public Safety Building negotiations: Tempers snap

By J. MARK BARFIELD
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — Saying they weren't influenced by politics or an anonymous letter blasting the top-ranked firm, Seminole County commissioners voted 4-1 Tuesday to authorize negotiations to begin with the number two firm to design their $10 million Public Safety Building.

Tempers snapped when commissioner Daryl McLain, his voice shaking, said the process was polluted by the letter and approaches made by a subcontractor for second-ranked Spillis Candela and Partners Inc. McLain called for the selection process to begin anew.

When other commissioners said they weren't influenced by the contacts and the unsigned letter, and were ready to vote, McLain accused them of questioning his integrity. As voices raised, commission chairman Dick Van Der Weide threatened to turn off McLain's microphone, officially and publicly silencing him.

Such was the tone Tuesday afternoon as commissioners authorized staff to begin negotiations with Spillis Candela for the $1 million contract to design a merged Sheriff's Office and Public Safety Department center at Five Points. If negotiations fail, negotiations will revert to Architects Design Group Inc., now the number two firm.

Commissioners must still vote to award the contract after negotiations are completed.

McLain was the only commissioner to oppose the decision. Commissioners Van Der Weide, Carlton Henley and Pat Warren contained their support of Spillis Candela. Commissioner Larry Furlong switched his support from ADG to Spillis Candela. Furlong said he made the switch only

Murder trial:

Meyers won't testify in his own defense

By SANDRA ELLIOTT
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Anton Daryl Meyers told a circuit court judge Tuesday he will not testify at his first degree murder trial.

Meyers, 34, said he originally planned to testify but has changed his mind. He is charged with murder in connection with the 1987 disappearance of 14-year old Kathy Engels. No body has ever been found although friends and family of the girl have testified they have not seen or heard from her since the early morning hours of May 25, 1987.

However, Tuesday, real estate agent Betty Waine testified she saw Engels with another girl and a young man, who appeared to be walking with them, at the Altamonte Mall about 2 p.m. May 25. Waine worked at Feathers Edge where Engels lived with her grandparents and knew the

Focus: New school board offices

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Although planning of a new Seminole County School Board building has been underway for a while, the first moves to get the project underway will begin tomorrow.

Three aspects of the new facility will be brought before the Sanford Planning and Zoning Commission during its regular meeting tomorrow night.

The items, listed separately, include:

Public Hearing — to consider a request for a conditional use for the property in a GC-2 General Commercial Zoning district, for the purpose of construction within a secondary wellfield protection zone.

Public Hearing — to consider a request for a dimensional variance for the property, for the purpose of allowing a maximum building height of 55 feet 10 inches, (50 feet required), and 400 parking spaces, rather than 428 proposed for this size facility.

Site plan consideration.

According to Director of Planning and Development Jay Marder, the parking space requirements are expected to be approved. The request is to have them nine feet wide rather than 10. Marder says similar requests have recently been approved for Seminole Towne Center, Gateway Plaza, and McDonalds restaurant.

The construction at the wellfield protection zone is also not expected to present any problems.

The new school facility is to be located at 400 E. Lake Mary Boulevard, just east of U.S. Highway 17-92. The land is just to the north of the northern end of Sunland Estates, and contains approximately 7.23 acres of land.

The formal name given to the building is Seminole County Public Schools Educational Services Center.

It is planned to be four stories in height, with a large round room at the left end for board meetings.

House, land is haven for abused kids

By VICKI DeSORMIER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The trauma of sexual or physical abuse need not be complicated by an investigation conducted in a sterile or bureaucratic environment.

Such has been the case, however, for a project called Kids' House, which for several years has operated out of a cramped office that is a part of the Seminole County Child Protection Team complex at a strip mall on State Road 436 in Casselberry.

It will no longer be that way.

A 1,600 square foot house and an acre of land on Lake Mary Boulevard in Lake Mary was donated to Kids' House by the Seminole County Commission yesterday.

Kids' House, a coalition of Seminole County law enforcement agencies, court officials, social service agencies and community groups, has been working together for about a year to help youngsters who may have been physically or sexually abused.

The group conducts interviews that are designed to determine whether a child needs to be removed from the home where the abuse is occurring.

They feel that the children will be less afraid to speak openly with investigators if they are in a pleasant home-like environment. Experience has shown that the children are more likely to offer

Police seeking airman, family was slain

MARY ESTHER — Authorities were continuing the search early this morning for an Air Force enlisted man whose wife and two children, were found slain at home.

Design

"I agree they could both do good work," said Furlong, who said he rated both a "nine" on a 10-point scale but adding "I'm disturbed by the whole process."

"The whole process" began in April when county management recommended giving the edge to ADG based on their experience in designing emergency centers.

During the staff ranking process, an unsigned, professionally printed letter appeared on the desks of commissioners questioning ADG. The writer alleged ADG had caused delays and cost overruns for the new Florida Highway Patrol building in DeLand and other central Florida projects.

Commissioners passed the letter on to County Manager Ron Rabun who asked Deputy County Manager Sharon Goode-Laluzure to look into it. Laluzure obtained written responses from key personnel in the letter and all of them stated there was no truth to the allegation.

The staff ranking went to the board of commissioners May 10 to be decided along with three dozen routine actions in a single vote. Commissioners singled out the item, but could reach no decision, although only Furlong and McLain expressed support for their staff's recommendation.

ADG attorney Ken Wright told them the process was tainted by the letter and warned his client may challenge if a decision was made that day.

Wright suggested, and commissioners accepted, they view projects completed by each firm and hear presentations by them. The suggestion altered the course of the county's normal professional contract approval process where competing firms have most contact with staffers and may never meet commissioners.

The tour and presentations completed, they resumed the discussion Tuesday. During the meeting, McLain said he was particularly upset that a person had contacted him prior to the presentations suggesting the professional contract selection process was flawed, citing as an example the Public Safety Building contract.

"That individual came to my office and made it clear that person was not involved with either firm, but then stated there were problems with the top-ranked firm," McLain said. "I later found out that individual's firm is listed as one of the subcontractors for Spillis Candela. This concerns me greatly. This is not doing business in a businesslike and ethical manner."

Although he did not publicly state the individual's name, McLain said later the person was Brenda Carey, a principal in the engineering firm Blount, Sikes and Associates. Blount, Sikes is listed as a member of the design team for Spillis Candela. McLain would not say whether he suspects Carey of authoring the letter.

Carey is active in the commission campaign of Carlton Henley, who describes her as "one of 50 or 70 people who sold tickets" to Henley's February 24 fundraiser that raised nearly $30,000.

Henley said after Tuesday's meeting he had never discussed the contract with Carey and was not influenced by her in any way.

"Brenda Carey never asked me about it or lobbied me in any way; she never discussed it with me," said Henley.

Henley mentioned a neighbor of his was Joy Austin, public relations director for ADG. Henley said he wasn't influenced by her, either.

Carey could not be reached for comment. When Henley and Warren stated they weren't going to be influenced by anonymous contacts and letters, McLain snapped back "My concern is when meddlers get involved. I think we need to start off again."

To the two commissioners, with voice raising, McLain continued "If you want to name names, I will too."

Van Der Weide interjected, "Don't bring personalities into this or I'll shut off your microphone."

Henley and Warren chorused they didn't intend for their comments to be taken as an attack on McLain.

The commission then settled down and voted 4-1 to begin negotiations with Spillis Candela.

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

SBC elects local pastor leader

By DAVID BRIGGS AP Religion Writer

ORLANDO — A Florida pastor who captured the presidency of the Southern Baptist Convention wants to make peace with disaffected conservatives, saying it's time to end political infighting.

The Rev. Jim Henry of First Baptist Church in Orlando won 55 percent of the vote Tuesday on the opening day of the nation's largest Protestant denomination's 137th annual meeting. He defeated the Rev. Fred Wolfe, chairman of the convention's Executive Committee.

The victory by a vote of 9,878 to 8,023 ended a string of 15 presidential victories for a conservative faction that has led a takeover of the denomination.

Henry said his victory was a sign that Southern Baptists are tired of feuding

Let's move on ahead. Anything that we can do to create unity without sacrificing principle, let's do it."

-The Rev. Jim Henry

among themselves, and encouraged Baptist conservatives to come together to re-emphasize mission work and building strong churches.

"Let's move on ahead," Henry said after his election. "Anything that we can do to create unity without sacrificing principle, let's do it."

The election was the first close presidential race since 1990, the last time modern Baptists mounted a serious challenge to the conservative leadership. This time, both candidates were theological conservatives, but Henry supported less antagonistic relations with moderates.

In his nominating speech for Henry, the Rev. Jack Graham of Prestonwood Baptist Church in Dallas said Henry is a committed conservative who "will not polarize us, will not politicize us."

Henry was also supported by Russell H. Dilday Jr., whose firing in March as president of Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth shook up many conservatives as well as moderates. Seminary trustees said Dilday assailed individuals who believed in the literal truth of the Bible, but Dilday's supporters said he was let go for criticizing the "hardball politics" of the conservative leadership.

State conducts first statewide hurricane exercise

By ADAM YEOMANS Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — Nearly two years ago, Hurricane Andrew ravaged South Dade County in the nation's worst natural disaster.

This week, state and local officials are pretending an Andrew-like storm will hit Florida today as part of a statewide exercise to test a new disaster response plan described as a national model.

The drill is part of the state's efforts to assume more responsibility for helping counties overwhelmed by a killer storm.

Federal emergency officials say Florida's plan will serve as a model for other hurricane-prone states but state officials said the drill will ensure it works the way it's supposed to during an actual disaster.

"We know we have the nation's best emergency management plan on paper," Gov. Lawton Chiles said Tuesday at the state emergency operations center. "It's time now to see how it works before it's tested by fire."

The plan calls for the state to coordinate relief efforts and provide emergency support functions ranging from transportation and food to volunteers and donations.

Early Tuesday, officials issued a hurricane warning from New Smyrna Beach to Hallandale and the mock storm was expected to hit the coast near Palm Beach and Martin counties sometime today with gusts up to 140 miles an hour.

Hurricane Pyfrom, as the simulated storm was called, was expected to cross the state with high winds ripping through inland counties and hit St. Petersburg and Tampa.

The simulated storm was named after the late Al Pyfrom, director of emergency management for Washington County.

The exercise was to affect half of the state's 67 counties. Counties not directly affected by the storm were to act as hosts for evacuees and assist in simulated recovery efforts.

Roach-eating fungus headed Florida's way

By Associated Press

TAMPA — Floridians waging war on cockroaches could soon have an unlikely ally — a fungus that eats the bugs.

A Massachusetts company this week plans to introduce the fungus to Florida, where it should find plenty to eat.

"This is using nature to control nature's pests," said Kevin Devine of EcoScience Corp. of Worcester, Mass.

The product is part of a new wave of pesticides that contain natural agents to battle bugs; traditional synthetic chemicals can be poisonous to people, pets and the environment.

The company plans to launch the Bio-Path Cockroach Control Chamber at the annual Florida Pest Control Association convention that began today in Tarpon Springs.

Scientists have known for more than a century that the fungus, called Matarhizium anisopliae, was lethal to certain insects.

The fungus, normally found in soil, lives inside a small plastic chamber and jumps on any roach that crawls through. Devine said.

But unlike other "roach motels," the roaches do crawl out and live long enough to brush up against others, infecting them, too.

The bugs are doomed once the fungus attaches itself to the outer shell. The spores soon begin sprouting like seeds and producing enzymes that penetrate the shell. Once inside, the fungus feeds on the roach's insides.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has unconditionally approved the product, prompting state officials to approve it.

Hoax bomb leads to arrest

A Lake Mary man was arrested on a charge of planting a hoax bomb after the Seminole County Bomb Disposal Unit was called to remove a device from his propane gas tank Monday morning. A Discount Propane serviceman called police after discovering a metal cylinder with a black switch and black wires attached to a company tank at a home at 364 Crystal Ridge Way. The tank bore a sign declaring "Warning. Anti-theft device. Do not remove." Access to the street was closed shortly before noon and nearby homes were evacuated as the bomb squad was summoned. The resident, Ronald Rhodes Barnette, 45, arrived and informed police the bomb was fake. It was intended to deter the gas company from removing the tank, he said. Barnette was arrested on a charge of placing a fake bomb. He was taken to the Seminole County jail.

Thunderstorms revive waterways

By J. MARK BARFIELD
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — The year-long drought bottomed out last month when a 17.4-inch rainfall deficit was recorded in Sanford. But daily drenching thunderstorms this month may quickly reverse that trend, according to information provided by the St. Johns River Water Management District. A district rain gauge at Wekiwa Springs State Park recorded 7.71 inches of rain since June 1. By Friday, the Wekiwa River had risen nearly a foot from the average May level.

The district monitors above- and below-ground water conditions throughout its entire 19-county area.

By the end of May, Sanford had a 12-month rain shortfall of 17.43 inches, making it the officially driest place in the district. Only 1.91 inches of rain was recorded during the month. 1.45 inches below the normal amount of 3.36 inches. The current normal is the averages between 1961 and 1990.

The Wekiwa River at State Road 46 dropped to a low of 6.74 feet above mean sea level, only eight-tenths of a foot above the low on a record dating to 1935. The district monitors the river's rise and fall.

When the level began dropping below normal levels, district water managers imposed an 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. watering ban last June for the area surrounding the river. In Seminole County, the area includes all areas west of Interstate 4. Elsewhere in the district, residents are not permitted to water landscaping between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. After several months, some rain soaks underground to replenish the Floridan Aquifer, the state's primary source of drinking water. The level of the water in a district well in Geneva dropped 0.13 feet during May. A Longwood well dropped 2.42 feet during the month, a 6 percent plummet.

Get the Lead out!

(Of your drinking water, that is)

The good news is that most homes have very low levels of lead in their drinking water. However, some homes have high lead levels which significantly increase a person's total lead exposure.

Lead seldom occurs naturally in water supplies. Lead enters drinking water primarily as a result of corrosion, or wearing away, of materials containing lead in household plumbing.

To reduce lead exposure in your drinking or cooking water, run water from a faucet anytime it has gone unused for more than six hours. Use only cold water for cooking. Check your plumbing for signs of lead.

Call SSU's Communications Department for a free "Lead" pamphlet that explains the problem and tells what to do about it.

Look locally for workers

Construction work is finally underway on the Seminole Towne Center Mall. The economy of the area is bound to improve because of it.

Melvin Simon and Associates, the mall developer, has estimated the building will be completed by March of 1995, with grand opening set for Sept. 7, 1995.

An Atlanta firm, Hardin Construction Group, has been designated prime contractor for the job. No doubt, Simon believed it had excellent credentials, possibly better than any bids made by Central Florida firms.

The developer is in business to make money. If it is believed the Atlanta firm is the best for the job, we have no objections.

What happens next however, could be a cause for concern. Many sub-contractors and specialized construction groups will be needed for this massive building project. What percentage of these companies or workers which will be hired, will be local people?

Seminole County's unemployment percentage is approximately one-tenth lower than most of the Central Florida area. But that alone should not be a determining factor.

Regardless of the figures, there are still many people within a 20 mile radius of Sanford who are in need of work, and should be considered. Many are also experienced in the construction business, and would make excellent foremen or shift leaders.

There are a number of excellent organizations in the local area which specialize in locating certain types of workers. They should be brought into the picture and called on as often as possible.

Approximately 1,400 construction jobs have been mentioned for the Seminole Towne Center Mall project. We should naturally expect the prime contractor to bring in possibly 100 or 200 top personnel, but the day-to-day labor needs are still high.

Even after the mall begins operation, 2,700 jobs will be available in retail sales, stock workers, floor persons, store clerks, janitorial workers, and even auto mechanics.

Even if only half of the construction jobs and half of the operational jobs go to people in the area in and around Sanford and Lake Mary, our economy will see one of its best improvements in many years.

With more people employed, there will be more money spent in our community for food, clothing, shelter, and many other needs.

Everyone will benefit from this... if it comes about.

We urge developers, the major contractor and all sub-contractors to look locally for workers. Our people are ready, willing and able to help. By giving them the opportunity, you will be helping our entire area.

Gender equality

Recently, professors at Seminole Community College computed final grades. For this reason, I did not enlighten a male professor who refused to walk through a classroom door I held open for him. In his words, "Ladies must go first."

Women may go first through some doors, but when it comes to gender equality, doors are being slammed in their faces.

Are the two related? Does gallantry perpetuate discrimination?

When men assume the chivalrous role, consciously or unconsciously, they are pushing women out of traditional male territory. When women accept chivalry, they may be promoting discrimination.

The problem becomes apparent on the average date. The man is expected to call for the woman, open the car door, drive to the restaurant, open the car door again, open the restaurant door, seat the woman, order the wine and food, and finally, pay the bill.

Even if men insist upon the rest, they should consider this when the check comes: Women have careers, and women earn money. There are still some women who cannot distinguish the check from the salt and pepper, but there are many others who want to pay their share. These women realize that their share is no longer just looking pretty.

Gender inequality is deeply rooted in culture. To resolve this problem, outdated notions of gender roles must be discarded. Men, the next time a woman opens a door for you, you should smile, nod, or say, "Thank you," and then walk through that door. You will still be a man. I guarantee it.

And The Longest Day continues...

The stirring celebrations on D-Day remind us that what has already happened can be organized somewhat neatly (if not always accurately) in history books. It is the future that gets so sloppy.

The past can be seen this way: In the early part of the 20th century, after World War I, ideological dictatorships — fascist and communist — tried to take over the young democratic world by force. Eventually the democrats returned from somnolent decadence and fought back. Lead by America — with a turning point on D-Day, June 6, 1944, recalled recently on all our television sets — we built the military machine to help destroy the fascists.

Communism didn't fall until 1989, almost a half-century later. Against the Germans, Japanese and Soviets — in Europe and in Asia — the democrats won big wars, the ones that could have threatened our own democratic being. (Are we going to have to wait until 2039 to have a D-Day-style celebration for winning the Cold War?)

But then what? What will the history books of tomorrow say about today? When Bill Clinton ran for president he signed on to a foreign policy that said his principle goal, or at least one principle goal, would be to help continue the extension of the global democratic revolution, with vigor but not violence. I think that is our mission. It's not a new story but a continuation of the old one.

But short-term reality intervenes. It is not all quite so simple. Americans weren't going to stick around Somalia if it meant getting killed. We're not going to Bosnia with ground troops over issues that seem to have much more to do with ethnicity than democracy. Haiti is a puzzle. China is a big puzzle. The possible coming of nuclear weapons to North Korea could prove monstrously danger ous, but not just because North Koreans don't have freedom of expression.

In all these cases, Team Clinton has bungled often badly. His flip-flopping — there, here and everywhere — has cost us in terms of future credibility.

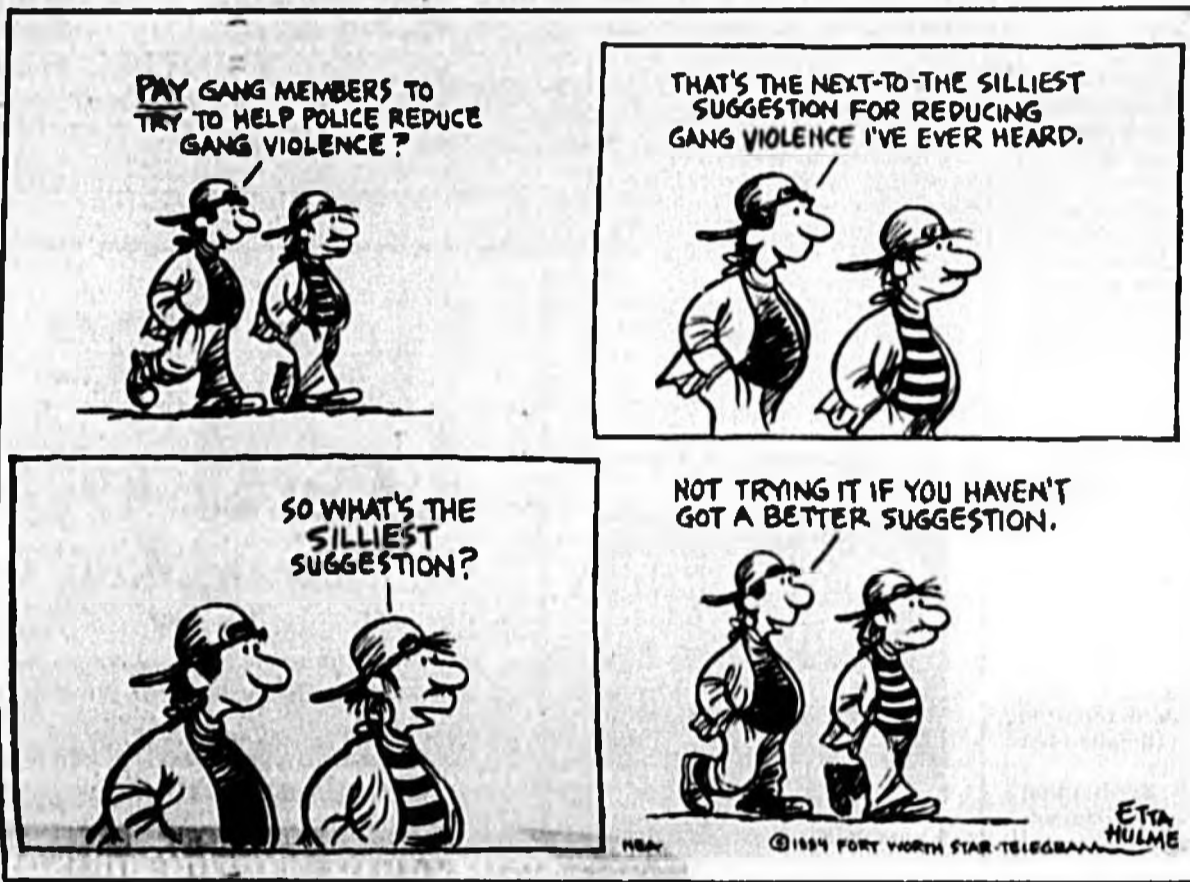

But do remember that one great lesson of D-Day, and then of the Cold War, is that democracies are only indecisive and soft on the outside, and only for a while.

The struggle for the enlargement of democracy still goes on. It is the fight of our age. But while tanks, carriers, generals and diplomats are still important, it's a struggle for the culture, what the Nazis — very much on the wrong side of the issue — called the kulturkampf.

In that contest for the culture, notwithstanding all the chaos and bungling, the good guys are still winning. Free politics and free economics have a life of their own. Sometimes we can help it along, sometimes not. There is a chance that what is happening in South Africa will be a successful miracle. South America is mostly democratic, and Mexico is moving that way. What's going on now in Russia may still work out. There are Asian democracies, with different rules, some of which may make sense.

It is the future that gets so sloppy.

Prison rape: The last taboo?

BOSTON — It's tempting to describe this as the last taboo. But there is a new contender for that title every day. Taboos are falling across our culture like dominoes. What was unspoken yesterday dominates talk shows today.

But last week the Supreme Court issued an opinion on a topic that has been hidden from public view as the inside of a maximum security lockup. In a decision allowing an inmate to sue prison officials for failing to protect him, the court took on the subject of prison rape.

Justice David Souter wrote, "Being violently assaulted in prison is simply not part of the penalty that criminal offenders pay for their offense against society." He added that having stripped inmates of "virtually every means of self-protection and foreclosed their access to outside aid... the government and its officials are not free to let the state of nature take its course."

The truth is that until now rape has been "a part of the penalty" paid by criminal offenders. Rape of men by men has been a penalty administered by the prisoner power structure. It's been the penalty ignored or tacitly accepted by many of those who call themselves corrections officials.

Many a prison has been reduced to a predatory "state of nature" in its most Darwinian sense. Indeed the fear of rape has been used to scare young, could-be offenders, straight.

In a recent, powerful series, The Boston Globe's Charles Sennott described the culture of rape in prison. It's a culture in which victims are often said to have "asked for it" because they wore tight pants or a fresh face. It's a culture in which the weaker may literally pay the stronger for protection.

In this culture a man who complains to officials is told, "Toughen up, punk." Men who finally submit to one man to avoid rape by many are categorized as consenting homosexuals.

In California, one study showed that 14 percent of the prison population had been raped. Nationally, it's believed that some 200,000 or more have been assaulted out of the burgeoning population of 1.3 million male inmates.

Some of those assaults are not just grotesque add-on penalties but death sentences. The percentage of inmates infected with the AIDS virus is now 14 times as high as in the population at large.

But these facts have produced more shrugs of acceptance than cries of outrage. A Massachusetts Department of Corrections spokesman asked about an assaulted prisoner who may have contracted HIV echoed the sentiment perfectly. "Well," he said, "that's prison." Boys will be boys, prisoners will be prisoners.

It's not surprising that we've ignored prison rape or accepted it as a side effect. The subject is charged with attitudes about homosexuality as well as criminals.

It's only within the past decade, after all, that we have begun to talk openly about sexual violence at all. We've peeled away layers of "last taboos" that inhibited talk about sexual abuse by parents, teachers, priests.

We are also painfully slow in acknowledging and dealing with violence by adult men against adult men. It's as if, according to the "laws of nature" Souter decried, or the laws of war, men are supposed to duke it out themselves, even when one is 100 pounds stronger than the other. In or out of jail, we are at our worst in protecting men from each other.

Ironically, this prison rape case, the first to come before the Supreme Court, a breakthrough case about male-on-male prison rape, was brought by a transsexual. The lawyers for Dee Farmer claim that the prison officials should have known better than to place a preoperative transsexual with silicone breasts who considers himself a woman in a population of men. They referred to Farmer as "she."

I have no idea how Farmer will fare when his/her lawsuit is heard in the lower court. But at least there is a small flashlight turned on this darkest of human corners.

Today Americans worry incessantly about crime. And we don't seem to care what criminals do to each other as long as they are locked away from us.

But what happens when the man convicted of a minor crime becomes the victim of a major crime? What happens when the man given tacit permission to assault the weak, especially the "effeminate," comes out of jail and into contact with the weak, especially the female?

No law and order advocate can condone order-by-sexual-assault in a so-called House of Corrections. As Bill Weld, the Massachusetts governor who prides himself on being tough on crime, said, "Caning is a sentence. Rape is not a sentence."

The most popular criminal law of the moment is "three strikes and you're out." But there must be another crackdown on the unwritten code that warns "one strike and you're raped."

Many a prison has been reduced to a predatory "state of nature" in its most Darwinian sense.

The whiff of a U.S. military coverup

WASHINGTON — Anyone wondering why our government still isn't sure if soldiers were exposed to harmful chemicals during the Gulf War should review the military's bumbling history of defending against these nefarious weapons.

Chemical and biological weapons — often called the poor man's atomic bombs — are once again in the headlines as Congress considers how to compensate the tens of thousands of veterans suffering symptoms of what's been dubbed Gulf War Syndrome.

While the Clinton administration focuses on a nuclear North Korea, chemical and biological weapons (CBWs) remain a weapon of choice among Third World nations. They're easier to hide from prying foreigners than nuclear weapons, and much easier to make.

Detecting the tools of chemical warfare is a very inexact science, say more than a dozen experts, mostly from the U.S. intelligence community, who spoke with our associate Dale Van Atta on the condition of anonymity. Together, these experts explained one of the most mammoth CBW errors ever made by the intelligence community. The episode began 21 years ago, and elements of it are still being kept secret. But we have obtained some classified documents that reveal the huge mistake kept from the American public.

The story begins with the Arab-Israeli "Yom Kippur War" of 1973. The war turned out to be an intelligence bonanza for the Israelis. America was excited as well by the prospect of taking a close look at some of the advanced Soviet weaponry the Egyptians had been using.

The Israelis turned over a wide variety of captured Soviet-supplied Egyptian weaponry to the CIA for analysis. This included the individual CBW antidote kit each Egyptian soldier carried aboard armored personnel carriers.

The CIA's Life Sciences Division met excitedly to work on analyzing the kit, code-naming the entire project "Grand Plot." Little did they know how appropriate and ironic that code would become over the next decade.

Early work turned up a curious element in the antidote provided in the kits, which CIA officials believed to be the latest in Soviet nerve gas defense. Two elements were already known and used in the United States — atropine and TMB4. But a third element was benactyzine, a known hallucinogen. The CIA dubbed the new antidote by its acronym, TAB.

Testing came next and the usual suspects — monkeys — were tapped for the job. The monkeys were gassed and the antidote applied. They lived. The CIA's after-action report, still classified Top Secret, claimed that TAB was "effective against soman and other standard nerve gas poisoning."

The CIA convinced its sister intelligence services in the military that it had found a new antidote. The U.S. Army soon began using it, replacing its old atropin injectors with seven million new injectors filled with TAB.

Some NATO allies cautioned U.S. Army officials that if there was a war, and the Army used its TAB injectors, American forces would crumble without a single Soviet chemical weapon being fired. Those self-injected soldiers would be too confused by the strong hallucinogenic side-effects of benactyzine.

But the military bureaucracy dug its heels in, and kept the new injectors for five more years. Finally, in an internal memorandum dated Nov. 4, 1980, the U.S. Army chief of staff quietly ordered the destruction of the millions of TAB injectors.

They're easier to hide from prying foreigners than nuclear weapons, and much easier to make.

Insect tests suggest chemical combination could be lethal

WASHINGTON — A scientist researching illnesses suffered by Gulf War veterans found that a bug repellent is 10 times more deadly on cockroaches when combined with a drug that protects against nerve gas.

But Department of Agriculture scientist James Moss said Tuesday that does not prove the same would be true with humans.

Gulf War could possibly be the cause of Gulf War Syndrome.

"This does not prove that this combination is the cause of the Gulf War Syndrome," he said. "I think it is one of several possible combinations. I think it needs to be looked at."

A Gulf War Syndrome expert agreed, saying it was difficult to connect chemical effects on insects with chemical effects on humans.

"Trying to extrapolate animal data to humans is fraught with uncertainty," said Dr. William Eichenbacher, an associate professor at the Baylor College of Medicine. "When going from an insect to a primate, to say the reaction is related is really stretching it a little bit."

John D. Spengler, a professor at the Harvard School of Public Health and another member of the NIH committee, said he found the Moss study "intriguing" and worthy of more study.

Gulf War Syndrome is the unofficial name of a group of symptoms that have been reported by thousands of veterans of the Persian Gulf War. The effects include chronic fatigue, memory loss, rashes, joint and muscle pain, headache, shortness of breath and digestive distress.

An NIH committee determined that the symptoms of the illness were real, but the experts could not precisely define the disorder or determine what caused it.

U.S. personnel in the Gulf War theater were subjected to a complex soup of chemicals from bug sprays, fuel, drugs given to combat nerve gas exposure and disease, and airborne pollutants from burning oil wells.

teen-ager well. She described the shocked look on Engels' face when she saw the woman. They said "hi" and Engels was pulled in another direction by the girl she was with. Waine said she did not give the encounter a second thought until she learned Engels was allegedly missing prior to the mall encounter.

"There was no doubt in my mind who she was," Waine said. Prosecutor Chris White asked if it was possible the girl just resembled Engels and she shocked look on her face came from a stranger saying hello to her.

"Absolutely not," Waine replied. The witness brought a canceled check she cashed May 25, 1987 at a mall store to prove she was there. She told Engels' grandparents about the encounter and they immediately went to the mall with posters of the missing girl.

Two other defense witnesses said they spoke to a teen who looked like Engels after the date she disappeared.

Scheduled testimony today will show one inmate who cooperated in the early investigation of the Meyers' case got out of prison after serving a fraction of his sentence because of his cooperation.

Five of the state's witnesses in the case are prison inmates. Three defense witnesses, also inmates, testified at least two of the state's witnesses have lied agreeing to testify in exchange for help with their own sentences. The state witnesses all testified under oath they have not been promised or received anything in exchange for their help.

The defense is attempting to show at least one inmate who involved in the Engels' case investigation received special treatment in getting out of prison years before his scheduled release date. White argued out of the presence of the jury Tuesday that many non-violent inmates served only portions of their sentences under the guidelines in place at the time.

Bradly Bloch was sentenced to eight years in prison for racketeering but served only a small portion of that time after promising to help authorities. Bloch agreed to wear a body bug when talking to Meyers attempting to get information about Engels' disappearance. He even claimed knowledge of where Engels' body could be found. The claim was unfounded and investigators were not pleased with the information Bloch provided.

A motion to furlough Bloch was submitted to the court by assistant state attorney Steve Plotnick and ordered by circuit court Judge Newman Brock, according to a probation file read by Judge Alan Dickey in court Tuesday.

Bloch was furloughed from prison August 15 and returned to Department of Corrections custody Aug. 24, 1991, five days earlier than scheduled. He was released from prison August 29, despite a control release date of Nov. 12, 1998, with the mitigating factor being his cooperation with police. After his release, Bloch was picked up on an unrelated charge which was settled through negotiation. Bloch's probation supervision was transferred to Michigan where he is in good standing.

The defense is also attempting to probe the role played by a former out-of-state policeman. A state control release administrator referred to a letter written by Detective Bill Parham of the Seminole County Sheriff's office explaining Bloch's assistance to law enforcement. Parham was referred to as a member of the Seminole County Sheriff's Homicide Task Force, or a special detective of the Lake Mary Police Department. White said Parham, who lives in Winter Springs, was a former New York policeman. The Lake Mary Police Department was short-handed at the time and White said Parham was a private investigator on the Engels case.

Defense attorney Ed Leinster has unsuccessfully attempted to subpoena Parham to testify in the case.

Testimony resumed this morning.

Write A Want Ad That Sells!

YOUR CLASSIFIED AD works best when it contains what the reader wants to know.

GIVE FACTS Put yourself in the buyer's place. What would you want to know? List the item's age, condition, size, brand name, model and approximate value. If you're selling a car, state the type of transmission, mileage (if it's low) and special options.

DON'T EMBELLISH: It's risky business to exaggerate and it won't increase your chance of success. Misleading information may get a buyer to your home, it may also get you a punch in the nose.

AVOID ABBREVIATIONS: While a few abbreviations can save you space, too many of them strung together can create confusion. A confused reader won't take time to sort out your meaning.

INCLUDE PRICE: Surveys indicate that buyers are more interested in the merchandise when they know the price. This applies to everything from household furnishings to automobiles. Good merchandise, priced fairly, is the best guarantee of success.

BE AVAILABLE: A telephone number is fine if you're at home when your ad runs. If you're not going to be home, state the times you will be. Most people won't call back twice.

USE YOUR NAME: Put your name in your ad. It gives credibility to the item you are advertising. You may even get replies when someone who has read your ad sees you in a restaurant or walking down the street. That's the advantage of being in a small community such as ours.

Aspiration pneumonia can have many causes

DEAR DR. GOTT: Please discuss aspiration pneumonia.
DEAR READER: The inhalation of foreign material causes lung inflammation. Such foreign material includes objects such as peanuts, various vapors and fumes (especially hydrocarbon), and gastric acid. It's this last factor that presents such a challenge, because stomach acid, when it enters the lung, digests pulmonary tissue, as well as causing pneumonia.

arteries that are essential for normal erections. In such cases, therapy for the underlying problem (balloon angioplasty or arterial bypass grafting, for example) might reduce symptoms.
Also, as you know, many medicines used for heart afflictions and high blood pressure will cause impotence. I mention this because anticoagulants are often administered with other drugs. I encourage you to review the problem of erectile dysfunction with your physician -- or, if necessary, with a urologist.

Aspiration of gastric contents commonly occurs when an unconscious patient vomits. Therefore, aspiration pneumonia is a frequent complication of serious injuries, coma, heart attack, stroke -- and surgery. (This is the reason why anesthesiologists customarily place airway tubes in the throats of patients undergoing surgery.)
Aspiration pneumonia is diagnosed by X-ray tests and is treated with a combination of antibiotics and steroid drugs. As with many avoidable medical conditions, doctors and other health care workers prefer to prevent this complication, rather than to treat it once it develops. Thus, laymen are encouraged to turn unconscious patients on their stomachs, rather than keeping them on their backs.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I'm a heart patient and would like to know the effect of blood thinner medication on my ability to obtain an erection.
DEAR READER: Anticoagulant drugs, such as Coumadin, often mislabeled "blood thinners" (they do not "thin" the blood), are useful in preventing repeated strokes, heart attacks and other disorders marked by inappropriate clotting of blood within arteries or veins. The medicines do not affect potency.
Rather, I'd be more concerned that the disorder for which you require anti-coagulation might be to blame. For example, impotence is often caused by arteriosclerotic plaque lining the

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder
How do you view destiny? Perhaps like the former Secretary-General of the United Nations, Dag Hammarskjold, who said that destiny is "something not to be desired and not to be avoided."
Some bridge deals seem destined to end in tragedy. The contract is apparently impossible, defeat is inevitable. But don't give up immediately. You never know. You might find a way to deflect destiny.
After West opened with a weak two-bid, South landed in four spades. What are his chances of success?
Perhaps North should have bid three no-trump rather than four spades. But if that gambit backfires, four spades being makable while three no-trump goes down, partner tends to be unsympathetic.

If East has two or three trumps, it looks as though the contract stands no chance. East will rush in with the spade ace and switch to his singleton heart. The resulting ruff will kill the contract. How might South derail this denouement?
It needs considerable courage, but South might deceive West by winning the first trick in hand and immediately leading the heart eight. As this will look like a singleton, West will probably win with the ace and switch to a club, hoping East has the A-Q. With destiny dodged, South can draw trumps in peace.
Perhaps you won the first trick in the dummy and called for the spade jack, hoping to induce East to play low. He won't, but he still should be careful. Before switching to his singleton heart, East should cash the club ace, clarifying his intentions to West.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Instead of using your imagination as a positive asset today, you might be unduly negative. If you foresee yourself being defeated, it might be a self-fulfilling prophecy.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Timing is extremely important today. You must know when to assert yourself, and when to fire and fall back. If you can't read these signals properly, you may have problems.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You might not get the cooperation you need today if you treat others in a condescending manner. Left to fend for yourself, there's a chance you may not be as good as you think you are.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) A lack of patience could cause you to become unnecessarily discouraged today if your efforts don't produce desirable results on your first try. Keep plugging until you succeed.
SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Instead of being grateful for what you have and what you represent, you might be envious of others today. Don't be, because if you could change places, you wouldn't.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Small disagreements between you and your mate could be blown out of proportion today if both parties aren't careful. Don't rehash issues that push panic buttons.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Concepts and ideas you conceive today could be better than usual. However, even though they're very good, you might still be denied advocates.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) In order to advance our personal interests, we are sometimes required to be risk-takers. However, if you attempt to play this role today, you could be miscast.
PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) There is a possibility you might reject some wise advice today just because you dislike the source. This could be a counterproductive attitude, so keep an open mind.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) Guard against inclinations today to further complicate situations that are already complex by saying or doing something without thinking it through carefully.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Usually you're practical and astute in your material affairs, but this may not be true today, owing to a failure to carefully consider your alternatives and liabilities.
