Teen curfew

Clinton backs tough rules for teens, local cop chief cites enforcement woes

By Mike DeBorja
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — It hasn't proved successful to date in Central Florida, but President Bill Clinton is supporting tough curfews for teen-agers in an effort to fight crime. He brought the proposal to light Thursday during a talk before a women's church group in New Orleans.

Clinton is proposing that, nationwide, youngsters under 17 should be off the streets at 8 p.m. on school nights.

"I would have a problem with this," said Sanford police Chief Ralph Russell. "Sanford tried this but it never was ruled out by the courts. We never had it to a point where it would have to be enforced. Orlando tried it as well," he continued, "and again it didn't work. We found police would need additional space and additional officers to act as baby sitters."

Russell said part of the problem is what to do with kids when they are taken into police custody. "We just couldn't put these juveniles into a criminal atmosphere after we picked them

Arvida selling some property in Heathrow

By Vicki DeBorja

HEATHROW — Arvida Company is reportedly selling a large portion of its undeveloped lots in Heathrow to overcome a cash debt.

Arvida Central Florida Division President Ed Hill said present property owners in the Heathrow area will not be affected by the sale.

"In fact," he added, "most of the people in Heathrow are very enthusiastic about this. We are looking forward to some new builders coming into the area who will certainly be of benefit to the entire area."

The property is expected to be purchased by Agapoulos Properties, Inc., headquartered in Tampa. Agapoulos could not be reached for comment regarding the sale.

While there are indications the sale could possibly involve over $50 million, Hill said he:

Date-rape pill leaves victims defenseless

From Staff and Wire Reports

A woman drugged with an illegal sedative known as the "date-rape pill" often can't remember much of what happened to her except for brief, vivid flashes.

"We were on the couch," one woman said. "I came to for about 45 seconds when he was pulling my clothes off. I said 'No, stop' but my arms were like jelly. I then passed out again."

The Fort Lauderdale woman, who agreed to be interviewed only if her first name was used, doesn't remember anything else of the rape.

"You don't see, you don't hear, you don't know anything going on," Lisa said. "Nothing. You're just like a dead person."

Known as "rocks" as well as the date-rape pill, the illegal sedative Rohypnol has authorities worried about its use by rapists and abuse by young people. At least three cases of date rape involving the pill have been reported in Seminole County.

Ten times more powerful than Valium, Rohypnol is legally used in 84 countries to treat insomnia and before operations.

It's not approved for any use in the United States, but its popularity is growing, especially in southern states and especially among teen-agers and people in their 20s who often use it with other drugs.

In South Florida, one route — a small, white tablet that leaves no taste or odor when dissolved in a drink — cost as little as $1.50, down from

FLORIDA BRIEFS

Good Ship Lettipe goes down

JACKSONVILLE — Proud members of a far-flung beach crowdling ring were wearing T-shirts with their chosen logo, which they were hand to their chests, a spokesman said.

"They had their shirts up with the logo and the words the 'Good Ship Lettipe,'" U.S. Attorney Charles Wilson said Thursday. "Some of the defendants when they were arrested were wearing these shirts."

The Lettipe logo featuring a ship's wheel appeared on several beach towels as well as the custom-made shirts.

Nearly 17 tons of beach towels with a street value of $81 million was seized in the Jacksonville area in a smuggling venture intended to transport the drug from Pakistan to Canada, Wilson said.

The undercover investigation generated photographs of a hovering in the smugglers' mother ship and a small boat off the west coast of Africa.

These people were taken to a two-story apartment in Sanford, carrying a large suitcase of $10 in pesos and $2 million in cash, and they were arrested when they were leaving the Jacksonville area in the latest of drug seizures.

Four other smugglers were arrested, and Wilson said he would seek their extradition from Canada or Pakistan.

Taking the law in his own hands

PERRACOLA — The Sheriff and his deputies seized a burglary five years ago, but the man who was arrested and taken into custody later escaped.

So when an Army Sergeant, 25, saw three men in a two-story building late in the night, he pointed up a 12-gauge shotgun and fired twice.

The pellets wounded Jacob Davis, 24, in the back, but his brother, Lawrence, 18, and another youth, Victor Harrison, 15, escaped without injury.

When Jacob fell, Harry Burgess stood over him with the shotgun pointed in his hand and told the teens "Now you owe me $5 for these beach towels," Lawrence Davis said Wednesday.

Seminole County sheriff's deputies charged the younger Burgess with aggravated battery with a firearm, reckless discharge of a firearm and shooting into an occupied dwelling. Some of the shots hit a neighbor's home, officers said.

Florida law allows a citizen to use deadly force only if someone's life is in imminent danger. Harry Burgess was in no danger when he shot Jacob Davis and Deputy Sheriff Fisher. He added that burglary charges against the three youths are pending.

Court crosses award

MIAMI — A state appeals court has crossed a $6 million award for a heater partially paralyzed when his head hit a low bridge.

The South Florida Water Management District is not legally liable for injuries to Alan Taylor, and the district acted responsibly in its maintenance of the canal, the 3rd District Court of Appeal ruled Wednesday.

Attorneys argued the water district would be required to shut down public access to 1,500 miles of canals stretching from Miami north to Orlando or in essence maintain them as parks unless the court threw out the judgment.

"This decision serves the interest of the public," said Paul Heston, attorney for the West Palm Beach-based district. "It could have led to the closing of public access to public lands and water throughout the state."

Alan Taylor, who disappeared twice in the 1960s and was found in 1967, was paralyzed when he hit his head on a bridge over a canal in 1967. He was 19 at the time and remains paralyzed over half of his body.

Taylor had been working at the Maccys Canal in North Miami when he was injured on an outing with four friends in 1967. He was 19 at the time and remains paralyzed over half of his body.

Fish dying in Gulf

TALLAHASSEE — Thousands of fish turning up dead along the Gulf coasts of Florida, Louisiana and Texas are being killed by red tide, a plant-like organism that produces toxins fatal to marine life, Florida officials said.

Samples of Gulf of Mexico waters analyzed at the Florida Marine Research Institute in St. Petersburg revealed red tide, the Department of Environmental Protection said in a release Thursday.

"Thousands of dead fish from dozens of species have been washing up on Gulf beaches all this month."

Simultaneously, an apparently unrelated fish kill of mainly catfish is occurring in the northern Florida Panhandle, leading to the source of the catfish kill are continuing, the DEP said.

"We are fortunate to have detected the cause of this multiple-species fish kill so quickly," said Gerry Vail, who heads the DEP's Office of Fisheries Management and Assistance Services. "Our next priority is to focus on trying to find the cause of the recent catfish die-off."

Polk fourth-grader sentenced to juvenile facility for his standoff

BARTOW — Timmy Eason, the fourth-grader who bludgeoned Frances for his armed standoff with a deputy, says he's sorry. But he doesn't want to put it in writing.

"I can't remember much about this, but I'm sorry for everything I've done. The 10-year-old Timmy Eason told a judge during a brief sentencing hearing Thursday.

Timmy was sentenced to Polk County Juvenile Court under the name of a juvenile offender, a name, grand kidnapping and criminal mischief. He was sentenced to at least nine months at a juvenile treatment center and ordered to write letters of apology.

But outside of the courtroom, Timmy told reporters "I really don't want to write those letters."

His lawyer, Bill Rubin, advised Timmy by putting a hand on Timmy's shoulder and saying "That's enough."

Police said Timmy used his 5-year-old Glock as a human shield when he pointed a 12-gauge shotgun at a sheriff's deputy who brought a transit officer to the boy's home in February.

"I'd wonder about you then go to school," he blurted, according to police. The seven-month standoff ended when his grandmother arrived, pushed him the deputy and took the gun from Timmy.

Rubin had claimed the youngster was in a drug-induced trance caused by the neighborhood Frances.

The boy's mother, Cindy

Deaton, said he responded well to the drug at first, after a visit to a psychiatrist in January. But when the boy's drug was increased, he had violent mood swings.

This was the first known court case to involve a child using a handgun in January. But when the boy's drug was increased, he had violent mood swings.

The most historic warehouse in Florida

YEEHAW JUNCTION — The Desert Inn served food and drink to travelers, tourists, cowboys and Indians before there was a Starbuck's at every major truck stop — even before there was an Interstate 95 or Florida Turnpike.

It turns out the strange little rural motel, miles from anywhere, served up something else too. On Thursday, it celebrated repute, which the Desert Inn's owner is just now talking up.

"Once a year, around Memorial Day, we try to remind interest in the inn," said owner Beverly Stebeck. "It brings back a few memories for some of the guys around here. Not any boy's tell their wives about, of course."

Mr. Stebeck decided to go for the historic designation after state officials banned trucks from her establishment because it served alcohol and failed to meet the lodging standards.

The Desert Inn is in Yeehaw Junction, a tiny community where U.S. 441 and State Road 80 meet near the Florida Turnpike, halfway between Orlando and Palm Beach.

Special Olympics needs volunteers

The Volusia County Special Olympics training camp is coming to an end on Saturday, June 1. Participants have been advised to arrive at the camp at 8 a.m.

Specialist Larry Levine said an estimated 100 athletes will be representing a total of 10 Central Florida counties including Volusia County, in activities such as golf, swimming and softball.

The events will be held at Lake Brantley High School, Merril Park in Altamonte Springs, and at the Winter Springs Golf Course.

Levine said one of the biggest needs at the present time is for volunteers and supporters. He explained that nothing beats the cheer of family and supporters when a contestant comes across the finish line, regardless of a win or a loss.

Volunteers are urgently needed to help operate the events. They are asked to be at Lake Brantley and Merril Park by 8 a.m. on Saturday morning.

Volunteers for the golf competition should be at the Winter Springs Golf Course by 8 a.m.

"You do not need any special skills in order to assist in these exciting events," he said. "Just a willingness to help these remarkable athletes as they compete and go on to state competition."

To volunteer at either of the locations, or for additional information, phone the Bureau at 288-1581, or Art and Sandy Hart at 678-8788.

Volunteers for the golf competition should be at the Winter Springs Golf Course by 8 a.m.

Calling all farmers for commodity program

Farmers in Seminole County are being urged to contact the Farm Service Agency (FSA) of the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Deland, for information on a new government program. The program is designed to help farmers through July 15, with a farmer's only opportunity to sign up for the new market transition program.

Under the terms of the 1980

Farm Bill, if producers fail to sign up in the Market Transition Program before the end of the sign-up period, they will be excluded from the program for the next seven years.

During the new transition, farmers are free to plant what they want, with limited restrictions on fruits and vegetables. Producers are not restricted to farming their non-contract acreage, although they must continue to comply with conservation and related restrictions.

Farmers are eligible for the Market Transition Program if they participated in the wheat, corn, grain sorghum, barley, oats, upland cotton or rice program at least once in the last five years.

Payments are limited to $40,000 per person per year, throughout the life of the new seven year program.

For Seminole and Volusia County farmers, the location at which sign-ups for the new program are being accepted is the Volusia-Seminole FSA Office, at 124-S E. Amelia Avenue in Deland.

The office is open from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Homeless voice dreams and frustrations as soup kitchen scribes

By ANNE WOODWARD
 Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — The year he became homeless, C. Donald Mosley became a writer, in record his life on the streets and find out who he had become.

"I started writing to discover how I ended up this way," he said.

An outlet for his frustrations, loneliness and dreams came at a soup kitchen, where he took part in a 12-week workshop designed to document stories of the homeless.

"At first, I was a little worried about putting the truth down," said Arthur Penn, one of more than a dozen soup kitchen regulars at the Church of the Holy Apostles, who spent the spring writing about their lives.

But after he started writing, Penn said, "I got excited. I'm writing the way I talk. When I'm writing, I'm laughing, I'm feeling it."

The street writers celebrated their newfound voices with a public reading at a church Wednesday night, ending a class some would consider a stressful activity for people struggling to survive.

"Writing is not a frill, really," said the Rev. Les Maxwell of the Church of Holy Apostles, which feeds 1,000 people daily at the soup kitchen. "They need to be nourished this way as much as they need food."

One by one, the writers approached a microphone Wednesday and read their emotional, sometimes scathing essays to 60 people in the church pews.

Some looked sheepishly at the floor, barely audible. Others were dramatic, emphasizing certain phrases like they were reading poetry.

The members of the former address, prostitution and sexually abused women just about living on the streets. The topics covered included "My First Love," "A Letter to a Friend from My Street," "My Street Memories," and "My First Love," a husband who was spent years as a prehabilitating alcoholic, wrote about how his face changed in the past year.

"This face has challenged me to fight in a police station, only to have them laugh because they knew that it was a drunken challenge made by some one on under the influence of alcohol the body that supported the face, couldn't stand up," read Penn, wearing a faded tan corduroy blazer and tie.

"The face you would see today in a clean-shaven, the hair cut and trimmed... it is a clean face."

Some wrote about daily frustrations. Like the time a subway clerk refused to accept 15¢ pennies that Mosley Owens had collected for a ticket. When approached by the police, "I then showed them my subway fare (Cash Money) and they made up a lie and said 'cents do not have to count pennies during rush hour,'" Owens wrote.

"Chris got paid $10, $15, he to count money (including Penn's)."

The workshop, sponsored by a Sanford Daily magazine fund to promote community writing, exposed writers who have personal stories to tell from their slumbers, said instructor Alex Williams.

"Experience of life is not in everyone's possession," Williams said. "Some people have an overwhelming authority" to tell their stories.

Mosley, 38, said he returned to the workshop that he had been writing only about the homeless conditions, but hadn't provided what he had there. Like his troubled marriage.

"I really didn't know where to put the blame," he said after beginning the workshop. Mosley moved from a human shelter to an apartment in Queens and became a licensed electrician.

Penn, 44, said that before the workshop he had not written a word about anything in many, many years. At first, he said, he wrote about how he had been "lived a job in writing, in

Marijuana mayor

In The Associated Press

COPPELL, Tex. — Mayor Joseph Kinney says the marijuana she was growing on her back porch was purely for educational purposes.

Ten plants were confiscated Wednesday after a police officer noticed them during a routine patrol.

"Damn me, I didn't know I couldn't do it," Kinney said. "I was a two-time mayor, who said she wanted to see what the plant looked like. I know marijuana is an illegal drug, but in my case, it was ignorance."

While Kinney wasn't arrested, her case will be taken before a Coppell City grand jury July 1.

"We think a drug bust a couple of months ago and the citizens said they wanted to know what it (marijuana) looked like," Kinney said Thursday. A few weeks ago she found a cigarette vendor with marijuana seeds in a police department file cabinet and decided to plant them, she said.

Once they arrested she put them in individual zip bags, she said she provided to them in the police department case they got home.

"She's got David and police have been talking about the mayor's plants. David's married, her house after serving her with a warrant and confiscating the plants, but an Opra or drug paraphernalia was found, he said."

Teen curfew

Today, President Bill Clinton is to address a women's group at Church of God in Christ in New Orleans. He is to announce his plan to impose a nationwide curfew on teenagers.

Youngsters under age 17 would not be allowed to be on the streets after 8 p.m. on school nights, but later on weekends.

The Associated Press says this is a sounding board for the president to test his conservative themes in a conservative state.

Many people will immediately assume this is an attempt to place another plank in his platform for re-election this fall. They will assume that regardless of the fact that it may appear to be an effort to help reduce juvenile crime, it would never be approved in many states, and never be upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court, which is where it will eventually go, expecting many people to rise up against the plan.

We believe, in effect, it will do very little to keep youngsters off the streets. What it will do however, is give our law enforcement agencies more work. Finding a teen walking around after curfew will have our officers stopping them, probably picking them up and driving them to their homes.

This, we see, is a waste of our law enforcement time, effort, and an unnecessary expenditure of our tax dollars.

After the president gives his speech today, it will be interesting to see and hear various opinions on the matter. We expect those who have been victims of juvenile crime at night will staunchly support the suggestion.

Others who have youngsters however, especially those who have had their own children, will see this as an attempt to restrict their children's freedom to go to social gatherings, school functions and proms, and of course those who may have part-time jobs after school hours.

Of course, schools are out now, and the president is suggesting a later hour than 8 p.m. for the curfew.

Clinton's proposal, being presented today, has been only casually mentioned in the past. We expect, now that his plans are out in the open, they will become the subject of much talk, and much controversy.

We urge everyone to take a close look at both sides of this issue before jumping to any immediate conclusion.

At this point, we won't offer an editorial opinion either way. But we believe there is no doubt, this proposal could have a far-reaching effect on the people of our cities, counties, states and nation.

LETTER

Job well done

"On Monday, May 13, 1996 at approximately 7:30 a.m., personnel from the Sanford Fire Department were summoned to 114 East Jinkins Circle in reference to an emergency call for assistance regarding a possible heart attack.

Fire Chief Tom Hickson's rescue crews were Paramedics Chris Murphy and Anthony Faircloth and the engine crew consisting of Jerry Ransom, James Freocourt and Bruce Mosely.

The response was rapid and once on the scene personnel acted in the upmost and professional manner to render immediate assistance to the man who was going into cardiac arrest.

The professionalism displayed in their immediate action to render assistance proved the true caliber and concern these individuals have for human life.

They were able to revive the gentleman and stabilize him so that he could immediately be transported to Central Florida Regional Hospital for the additional medical assistance required.

Thanks to their efforts, this man is receiving treatment and is in stable condition and hopefully will recover from this experience.

I am proud that I have the opportunity to be connected with and serve with true professionals of the caliber that Tom Hickson has in his department. I have always felt that the Sanford Fire Department and the Sanford Police Department are two of the most professional organizations in the country.

I commend the efforts and actions of these officers and say "Thank you for a job well done."

On Boorda: Scavenging for news

Some years ago, before the various gay liberation movements, I got a call one Sunday morning from desk sergeant at a police station in Greenwich Village. "Have I got a story for you!" he said.

There had been a raid of a homosexual bar and among those caught in the dragnet was a United States senator. The sergeant, as a favor, was giving me an exclusive. No one in the press had been there, and he was not going to tell anyone else. The senator and the others had not been booked. It was a scare raid. The senator had gone home to another state.

I thanked the sergeant but didn't print the story. My editors in the newroom had taught me of the public's right to know, no matter who got hurt. But the senator had not been a whited sepulcher. He had not attacked homosexuals on or off the floor of the Senate. He had not said anything either way. In his fields of expertise, he was a valuable, honest legislator. And except for that call from the desk sergeant, there had been no reports about his private life that I could find.

In the climate of that time, if I had reported the senator's presence in a homosexual bar, he would quite probably have lost his seat.

On the other hand, I think the press, including me, should have reported President John F. Kennedy's athletic adultery. I wasn't covering the White House, but he came to New York from time to time, and I knew something of what he found time for, including the propositioning of a woman in my neighborhood. A president can put himself -- and even the country -- in peril by widespread extramarital intimacies.

But the pursuit of the late Admiral Jeremy Michael Boorda by Newsweek -- particularly by its pose of retired Army Col. David Hackworth and the National Security News Service -- reveals the press at its worst.

Boorda had not been caught in any act of corruption, sexual harassment or Captain Bligh-like cruelty. He was highly regarded both by the rank-and-file and officers who worked with him. His alleged crime, however, had been the wearing of two tiny brass "V" pins -- denoting service in combat operations during the Vietnam War -- to which he may or may not have been entitled.

Yet, despite those who have been circling the wagons in defense of Newsweek, there was no story worth printing. As Philip Steinhilber has noted in the New York Times, most of Boorda's Navy colleagues, including his commanders in the Vietnam War, "said that the rules about medals were as unclear in the Navy during the Vietnam War as they are today. He was fully entitled to the 'V' pins."

Yet, despite those who have been circling the wagons in defense of Newsweek, there was no story worth printing. As Philip Steinhilber has noted in the New York Times, most of Boorda's Navy colleagues, including his commanders in the Vietnam War, "said that the rules about medals were as unclear in the Navy during the Vietnam War as they are today. He was fully entitled to the 'V' pins."

None of the fearless journalists on his trail has admitted any error of judgment or soul. With regard to Hackworth, the Washington Post quoted a senior Pentagon official as saying that Hackworth -- weeks before the suicide -- was "bragging he could bring down a Navy admiral."

But this story that closed in on Boorda had no legs. Capt. Carl Albrecht, a former commander of Boorda, says about the "V" pins: "You could talk to a dozen naval officers about this and six would believe one thing and six would believe another." Some smoking gun.

MORTON KONDRACKE

Keeping fragile peace in Bosnia

Instead of trying to make a scandal out of the Clinton administration's knowledge of Iranian arms aid to Bosnia, Republicans ought to help Clinton keep the fragile peace he's made in the Balkans.

Specifically, GOP presidential candidate Bob Dole should urge Clinton to order military action to arrest the war criminals who run the Serb half of Bosnia and threaten to undermine the Dayton peace accords.

Having been badly burned by the botched effort to nab warlord Muhammad Farrah Aidid in Somalia in 1993, Clinton is reluctant to pursue Bosnian Serb bosses Radovan Karadzic and Ratko Mladic, even though they are wanted for trial at the Hague war crimes tribunal.

Clinton undoubtedly fears that Republicans will mercilessly attack him for any U.S. casualties in Bosnia. Dole could remove that threat.

Karadzic and Mladic are accused of inspiring and carrying out mass executions and other atrocities against Muslims and now prevent anyone but ethnic extremists from participating in Bosnian Serb political life.

If they remain in power, the chances are that the "free and fair" elections scheduled for September will be a sham, and if NATO forces leave the country on schedule at the end of the year, it will be only a matter of time before civil war breaks out again.

If Dole is elected president in November, he'd be responsible for figuring out how to cope with the mess -- but at the moment, he and other Republicans are looking backward, intent on converting a Clinton success into an embarrassment.

Five separate congressional committees are looking into the administration's April 1994 decision not to object to a proposal by Croatia's president, Franjo Tudjman, to allow arms from Iran to be shipped through his territory to Bosnia.

Senate Intelligence Chairman Arlen Specter, R-Pa., is representing the decision as a "covert action" that the administration was legally required to report to his panel, but didn't. In fact, while the decision was "covert," i.e., secret, it involved no real U.S. "action" at all.

Tudjman asked U.S. ambassador Peter Galbraith on April 29 what the U.S. reaction would be if Islamic nations, including Iran, transhipped arms to Bosnia. Galbraith, after consulting Washington, responded on April 29 that he had no instructions.

It was a "green light" to Croatia, but unlike the 1986 Iran-contra affair, in which the Reagan White House said overrode arms to Iran and used the profits to aid Nicaraguan rebels in violation of congressional mandates, the Clinton administration policy was purely diplomatic.

"If Congress had to be informed every time we were asked our opinion by a foreign government and gave it," a Clinton envoy commented, "this country would be unable to conduct foreign policy."

Moreover, according to another hero of U.S. Bosnia policy, former Assistant Secretary of State Richard Holbrooke, getting arms to Bosnia -- from whatever source -- was indispensable in saving Bosnia's Muslims from destruction in the winter of 1994-95.

"Without it," Holbrooke testified to Specter, "the Bosnian government would never have survived the winter, and we would never have gotten to Dayton."

Dole and most Republicans favored unilateral U.S. lifting of the United Nations arms embargo to aid Bosnia, but the administration resisted because European nations with troops on the ground in the Balkans militantly opposed it.

In September 1994, Holbrooke and Galbraith devised an alternative that became known as the Holbrooke initiative, whereby the United States would have arranged for Pakistan, Turkey, Saudi Arabia and other friendly Islamic countries to secretly break the arms embargo, but the policy was rejected by Secretary of State Warren Christopher and the White House.

Eventually, though, Bosnia itself directly asked those countries and others to provide arms, which they did without U.S. collusion. U.S. diplomats estimate that Iran was the source of less than half the weaponry reaching Bosnia during 1994 and 1995.

Republicans have attacked Clinton for "encouraging an Iranian foothold in Europe." Or, as Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., put it, "standing by while the most terrorist nation on earth comes into the bosom of the most volatile place on earth."

Hyde is chairman of a select subcommittee created by the House GOP leadership to look into the Clinton policy. The full House International Relations Committee, the House Intelligence Committee and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee also are investigating.

Clinton undoubtedly fears that Republicans will mercilessly attack him.

JOSEPH SPEAR

Nader: A top curmudgeon

Every once in awhile, we pause briefly in this corner of your newspaper to recognize a class of people who do more than any other to keep America sane.

I speak of curmudgeons, of course. Not simply anti-social scoundrels, but people who are blessed with a genuine talent for spotting hypocrisy and do not hesitate to point it out, people who have a low threshold of outrage and manage to express it with a degree of humor, creativity and class.

Such a person is Ralph Nader.

I know, you think he's so tripe, so anti-business, so predictably liberal. I agree to a degree. I do not, however, believe in everything Ralph Nader extols. I don't know if it's me sliding right or him veering left, but I find myself at odds with a lot of things he says these days.

Nader loves trial lawyers, and I'm not all that fond of them. He has probably never encountered a government regulation he doesn't like, and I counsel caution in that regard. He was adamantly opposed to the North American Free Trade Agreement as well as the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and I favored both. He was the only person to testify against the recent re-nomination of Alan Greenspan as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, and I happen to think Greenspan wears a Superman leotard under his penitentiary suit. Nader hates the two-party political system, and I think it's wonderful.

I'll come back to that in a moment, but first I want to remind you that Ralph Nader has also done immeasurable good for us. He was initially thrust into the public spotlight 31 years ago when he exposed the automobile industry's appalling disinterest in safety and found himself under surveillance by a General Motors detective. We owe him for cleaner water, cleaner air, healthier food, safer medicines.

It cannot be denied, however, that Nader is a weird duck. He is one of the most recognized faces in America, but he is basically a recluse. He lives in an apartment in an undisclosed location and reportedly subsists on about $18,000 a year. He adheres to a humble diet, refuses to ride in small cars and minivans, stalks the corridors of Washington inomber suits.

Now Nader is actually running for president on the Green Party of California ticket, and this is what has earned him special notice to this admirer of inspired eccentricity.

It would be difficult to top his performance of 1996, when he went to New Hampshire and campaigned for a candidate called "None of the Above," but he has managed to pull it off.

Nader does not want to be president. He accepted the Greens' nomination because he generally wants to promote third parties and specifically wants to throw the fear of God into that crypto-conservative Bill Clinton. Nader refuses to campaign, refuses to raise money, refuses to make commercials, refuses to disclose his finances, refuses even to register as an official candidate. And he absolutely refuses to sign on to the funky-left program espoused by the politically correct Greens.

They are pushing, for example, same-sex marriage.

Listen to what Ralph Nader recently told a Washington Post reporter about the Green Party's same-sex marriage nonsense: "I am not going to focus on gender politics."

When you stand on the political spectrum in between, if you really really curmudgeonly, you still love Ralph Nader.

We owe him for cleaner water, cleaner air, healthier food, safer medicines.

arrested at a gas station on State Road 48 near Interstate 4 after the armed suspect tried unsuccessfully to elude deputies.

Rush was arrested after causing damage to several vehicles, slightly injuring three people and crashing the vehicle he was driving into a garbage truck.

According to Ed McDonough, public information officer for the Seminole County Sheriff's Office, the armed suspect was being pursued by investigators following a tip about a man who stole a black Dodge pickup truck in Orlando on May 11. They were told he was staying at the Days Inn on Hickman Road.

Investigators were staying out the motel and had let the air out of two of the vehicle tires when Rush was seen leaving the hotel with two women.

As he was trying to leave, he hit one of the investigative team's cars. He tried to leave the area, but his another sheriff's office car and, finally, a garbage truck.

The truck he was driving was undrivable, but Rush was able to escape on foot. He was captured by deputies at the Amoco station a short distance away.

When he was taken into custody, Rush had a small handgun in his pocket. They also found a shotgun in the stolen truck, according to McDonough.

Curfew

up," he continued. "But there would have to be some-where to keep them until we could find a responsible adult to come get them."

Clinton made the recommendations for curfews in New Orleans, where a strict "dash to dawn" curfew presently in place is credited with reducing juvenile crime by 27 percent and lowering auto theft by 43 percent.

The president's talk was described by White House spokesman Mike McCurry as "a specific type of safety program for kids."

Clinton is reportedly using the trip to New Orleans as a good sounding board to test his conservative theme: Louisiana is a conservative state that gave Clinton 68 percent of the vote in 1988 and has a healthy number of young voters.

Waxing and waning over a century, curfews recently have been adopted or dusted off by most big cities and likely a majority of smaller communities, too, in response to alarm about how dangerous the dark seems to have become.

"Politically, it's a guaranteed winner," said William Ruffe at the University of South Alabama, a criminologist who has done several major curfew studies.

But as for whether they work. "The only answer at this point is, we don't know," he said.

More than 80 of the 300 largest cities passed curfew legislation in the past five years, bringing to more than 150 the number with such laws in effect. Ruffe found. Smaller places have shown a similar surge in laws forcing juveniles from most public places during certain hours.

"We want to share what is working," Clinton said, "not to tell every place they need it ... but at least to let them know that it's out there, that it's a tool, that people have made it work, that children's lives have been saved and their futures have been rescued."

Bob Dole, his Republican opponent for the presidency, said Clinton was again acting like a "me-too candidate" who "must have taken a poll" before deciding to embrace curfews. Dole noted that he had spoken favorably of curfews while visiting a park in California a day earlier.

"Obviously, it works in some communities," Dole said. "But we shouldn't have a federal curfew."

Communities have found that curfews narrowly tailored, with some exceptions for harmless nocturnal activities, have the best chance of withstanding legal challenges.

A Justice Department report cited by Clinton singled out seven cities - Dallas, Phoenix, Denver, Jacksonville, Fla., Chicago, New Orleans and North Little Rock, Ark. - as having curfews carefully drawn, apparently effective and closely linked to youth counseling and other services.

But a recent survey by the U.S. Conference of Mayors found "mixed feelings among city officials on curfew effectiveness," according to Associated Press in a story in this report.

The two women, Olivia Devoan and Ruby Guerrero, who were with him in the truck were treated for neck and back injuries. They were also arrested for grand theft auto and possession of a concealed firearm.

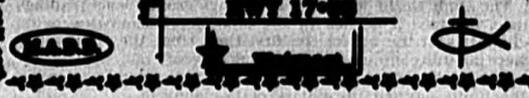

Rush is being held at the John E. Hall Correctional Facility on $4,000 bond. He was arrested for grand theft auto, aggravated battery on a law enforcement officer, possession of a concealed firearm and fleeing and eluding a police officer.

Alva. Bravo, 84, currently serves as a special master and as a civil traffic hearing officer for Seminole County Court. He has practiced law for 27 years.

Judge Alva has had 19 years experience as a trial attorney and judge.

Bravo had sought the position of Circuit Court Judge in 1984, finishing a close second. He said support has been strong from both Seminole and Brevard counties to run for the post again. "But because of the high esteem in which I held Judge Alva," he said, "I've decided to step aside in deference to her candidacy and focus my efforts and energy on the county court."

an immediate comment on the sale. Regarding the matter of over 300 displaced lots being involved in the sale, Hill commented, "I can't say exactly what is being said, but that figure certainly sounds way too high." He continued, "Actually, almost all of the property Arvida will be taking is undeveloped, and the lots are mostly in the northern part of Heathrow property."

While the contract for the sale has been approved, Hill said final closing would be in the final stages, and while he hoped all the matters will be approved as soon as possible, he said it could take as long as another week or another month.

Pill

about 65 less than a year ago, according to Pamela Brown, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency in Administration in Florida.

Seizures of the drug in Florida have skyrocketed. Since last October more than 126,000 pills were seized, compared with just 42,000 from October 1984 through last September.

Florida and Texas are hot spots for Rohypnol abuse but the problem is growing, according to the DEA, which in February counted some 2,400 Rohypnol investigations in 34 states. Texas had about 1,000 and Florida 650. Louisiana came next with 150 cases followed by Arizona with 86 and Oklahoma with 55.

Men who use rophies in rapes are far fewer in number than teen-agers looking for a cheap high. The man Lisa said raped her was charged in another rape case and Lisa agreed to testify about what happened to her as a key prosecution witness.

But Mark Perez, who bragged to friends that he had raped nearly two dozen women after slipping them rophies, pleaded to contest the morning his trial was supposed to start last year. He was sentenced to eight years in prison.

Perez is just the tip of the iceberg, according to Bob Nichols, the Broward County prosecutor who handled the case.

Nichols said he's gotten calls from victims all over the country, most of whom haven't gone to their local police.

"I've talked to 20 victims easily," he said.

Here's what he usually hears: A woman was at a bar or party. She had little to drink. A man she just met brought her a drink. Ten to 20 minutes later, she got dizzy and disoriented. Then she got nauseous and felt hot and cold and started having trouble talking and moving her arms and legs.

Before she passed out, there was a time when she was actually awake and aware but couldn't respond.

It's like "being on the inside looking out," Nichols said.

And when it's all over, victims have little memory of what happened to them.

Here's what usually happened: The rapist guided a woman who seemed to be drunk to her car, looked up her address on her driver's license, drove her home and used her keys to get them inside. Then he raped her. But when she woke up, she wasn't sure what happened.

Lisa plans to testify next month at a public hearing June 17 in Fort Lauderdale scheduled by Florida Attorney General Bob Butterworth, who is taking steps to change the classification of Rohypnol.

Rohypnol is now grouped with drugs that have a low potential for abuse, like Valium. Butterworth wants to classify it with drugs like heroin and LSD and is using his authority to make the change despite a legislative vote to the contrary.

State lawmakers this spring passed a bill that keeps Rohypnol classified as it is but increases the penalties for criminal abuse to the punishments used for heroin and LSD.

Children's rally challenged

By BOB ROSENTHAL
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON — A weekend march in support of America's children will be a massive display of liberalism at a time of tight budgets and anti-big-government sentiment, conservatives say.

Conservative groups on Thursday criticized the "Stand for Children" rally, saying it's really a call for more government spending.

The rally is organized by Children's Defense Fund founder Marian Wright Edelman, a friend of President Clinton and his wife, Hillary. It is expected to attract thousands of children, parents, grandparents, teachers and other child advocates to the Lincoln Memorial on Saturday.

The rally is not a partisan political gathering, organizers say, but a day of commitment to children. The conservative Heritage Foundation, however, wonders whether it will be the "last dance for big government."

The think tank claims the real goal of the march is to defend the continuing growth of the welfare system and criticize those in Congress who have tried to reform it.

Kenneth Weinstein, director of Heritage's government reform project, says at least 100 of the 5,700 sponsoring organizations are federal grant recipients that received a total of more than $200 million in 1995-96.

Edelman responded that "The Children's Defense Fund has never taken a dime. If they think the Salvation Army or Catholic Charities should not take government money to serve the poor, then they should say what they mean."

Gary L. Bauer, president of the Family Research Council, chairs the groups the children's Defense Fund invited to the rally were mostly those who believe government is a child's best advocate. "For them (the Fund) every problem is an economic one, explained not in the loss of values or loving homes but in dollars and cents," Bauer said.

Andrea Sheldon, director of government affairs for the Traditional Values Coalition, says the conservative, pro-family voice will be missing from the rally. The coalition represents more than 30,000 churches on issues such as abortion, education and religious liberty.

"America's parents are more effective in protecting their children than the whole staff full of lawyers and social workers," Sheldon says. "Playing on America's love for our children as a subterfuge for expanding government size and power is as dishonest as it is insincere."

Government is not the answer to America's problems, Edelman said, adding that as a black child growing up in the South, government perpetuated a two-tiered system. The issue is not big government, she says, but fair and effective government.

"Too many of those who talk about big government talk about it only when it's about government support for a safety net for your working families and for children but don't seem to be worried about big government when it comes to the Pentagon," she said.

Looking for activism

WASHINGTON — Paul Hill Jr., a Cleveland community activist, scooped up 40 local youth and boarded a bus to the Million Man March last October, searching for camaraderie, renewed hope for black men and a rebirth of black political activism.

Camaraderie and hope, he got. As for a reborn political activism from the march, Hill is still looking.

"The march showed how strong we as African-American men can be. It energized me," Hill said. "But I'm angry we didn't do more with the momentum. We didn't rise to the occasion."

Few could guess what the response would be when the march organizer, Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan, called for 1 million black men to march on Washington. But his call touched a nerve, and a crowd estimated at 400,000 to 1 million attended the day-long rally. It was hailed as a success by even critics of Farrakhan, who has been accused of anti-Semitic and anti-gay rhetoric.

Some hole should start to close

WASHINGTON — A massive chemical assault on the atmosphere's ozone layer is beginning to ease, and researchers say in a study published today that the ozone hole high above the South should start closing within 10 years.

The study in the journal Science says ground level readings have detected a decline in the amount of ozone-destroying chemicals in the air for the first time since the compounds were put into common use more than 30 years ago.

The study credits the change to an international agreement that limits manufacture and use of the chemicals.

"This is the very beginning of a change," said Stephen A. Montzka, a National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration scientist. "This is the first step toward the goal of closing the ozone hole."

Mandate from the people

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Protestant and Catholic leaders waited today for a mandate from the people of Northern Ireland, in an election that will determine which politicians get the chance to forge the province's future.

Thursday's special election, the first in Northern Ireland since a cease-fire raised hopes of a peace settlement two years ago, assures top vote-getters of their place in June 10 peace talks.

But some established leaders and constructive newcomers may find themselves looking in from the outside.

Car bombers beheaded

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — Four Muslim militants convicted in last year's car bombing of a U.S.-run military facility in Riyadh were beheaded today, the Interior Ministry said.

The convictions, all Saudi Arabians, were executed despite threats by underground extremists that they would attack American interests in the kingdom if the four were beheaded. Seven people, including two Americans, were killed in the bombing last Nov. 13.

The official Saudi Press Agency quoted an Interior Ministry statement as saying the four were executed in a square in Riyadh, the capital.

The agency identified the men as Abdulaziz Fahd Nasser, Riyadh al-Hajr, Muhi al-Shurani and Khaled Ahmed al-Said. In televised confessions shown on the state-run Saudi television April 23, the men said they were not linked to any particular group.

But they said they had been influenced by Islamic extremist groups in Algeria and Egypt that are seeking to topple secular governments in the two countries and replace them with strict Islamic rule.

The Interior Ministry statement said the men were executed so that "such repulsive acts would not be repeated."

House subcommittee OKs making same-sex marriage illegal

By CASSANDRA SUTELLA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — A Republican-sponsored drive to make same-sex marriage illegal under federal law was inspired by concerns about morality, not politics, says Rep. Henry Hyde, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

Supporters of a bill defining marriage as a "legal union between one man and one woman" aren't engaging in election-year maneuvering, he said Thursday as the panel's constitution subcommittee approved the idea.

"Don't assume people are doing this for political profit," Hyde said. "Some of us are concerned about the sanctity of marriage sanctioned by the government, trivialize marriage and condone public immorality."

The subcommittee voted 8-4 along party lines to approve the bill, bringing it a step closer to a vote on the House floor. The Senate has not yet begun work on a similar bill introduced by Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla.

President Clinton and congressional Democrats have accused Republicans of coming up with the plan to whip up anti-gay sentiment and better their chances of winning the White House in November.

But the president has said he'll sign the bill if it remains in its current form.

The House bill, sponsored by Rep. Bob Barr, R-Ge., would define marriage for federal purposes, keeping homosexual couples ineligible for a wide range of federal benefits, including Social Security payments.

It also would give states the authority to reject the validity of same-sex marriages performed in any other state. But it wouldn't block any state from conferring its own legal status on same-sex unions, according to the bill's sponsor.

Supporters say the legislation is necessary because of a court case that could make Hawaii the first state to recognize same-sex marriages. If that happens, the Constitution may require that all other states accept gay marriages performed in Hawaii as legal, they say.

Democrats said the bill was politically motivated and unnecessary because it would give states no more power than they have today.

Congress has more important issues to work on, such as employment, health care, crime and the economy, said Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich.

"Here we are, 180 days before an election, and this committee ends up with nothing to do but this," Conyers said. "If we don't have anything to do, we probably shouldn't be meeting."

Democrats — led by Rep. Barney Frank, an openly gay congressman from Massachusetts — tried repeatedly to amend the bill's language Thursday, but they were outvoted by the majority Republicans.

Freshman Rep. Michael Patrick Flanagan, R-Ill., voted for the bill despite reservations about the intrusion of the federal government into marriage, which traditionally has been regulated by the states.

"The federal government has never defined marriage, but that it was always understood what that meant," he said. "But now we find it necessary to say that out loud."

Conyers also said that since the bill would not be implemented, the House Ways and Means Committee should study it.

Netanyahu headed for Israeli victory

By BOB HENRY
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM — Right-wing leader Benjamin Netanyahu appeared before cheering supporters today as he headed for victory over Prime Minister Shimon Peres in elections that will shape the future of the Middle East.

Netanyahu led by 26,000 votes out of nearly 3 million cast in Wednesday's election, or 50.3 percent to Peres' 49.6 percent. His margin grew slightly today because of a recount of some ballot boxes.

Dan Tichon, a legislator from Netanyahu's Likud Party, told Israeli army radio that Netanyahu's victory was assured, based on nearly all the votes counted. Tichon is a member of the Central Election Commission.

Final results were expected by late today, the Central Election Commission said.

Ringed by security guards, Netanyahu posed for reporters outside his Jerusalem home this afternoon with his wife, Sarah.

"The country is in good hands," he said, waving at two dozen teen-age supporters who chanted, "Victory!"

Netanyahu spokesman Shai Benak said the candidate would not claim victory before Sunday.

Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat's Cabinet was to meet in special session tonight to discuss the outcome.

Palestinian leaders expressed concern that a Netanyahu victory would slow or paralyze negotiations with the Palestinians over the final status of the West Bank, Gaza Strip and Jerusalem.

"Maybe the next government will hesitate and postpone," said Mustafa Natche, the Palestinian mayor of the West Bank town of Hebron. "Maybe there will be a continuous delay in all the fields. This will be dangerous for the peace process."

Netanyahu pledged in his campaign to expand Jewish settlements in the West Bank, block the creation of a Palestinian state and retain Jerusalem's status as a capital of Israel only.

He also said he would not honor a commitment by Peres to pull troops out of most of Hebron.

Basak, his spokesman, tried to allay Palestinian fears today, saying the opposition leader was "committed to a deep obligation to peace with all our neighbors, including the Palestinians."

Hebron's mayor urged Peres to pull Israeli troops from Hebron before he leaves office. There was no immediate response from Peres' camp.

Braves nip White Sox

Game two of City Series Saturday at 6:30 p.m.

SANFORD — Keith Bertrand scored the game's only run in the top of the seventh inning as the National Division champion Enterprise Trucking-Braves edged the American Division champion Stairs Realty-White Sox 1-0 in game one of the best-of-three Sanford Recreation Department Little Major League City Championship Series at Fort Mellon Park's Roy Hollar Field Thursday evening. Game two in the series will be on Saturday evening at 6:30 p.m. at Roy Hollar Field. Game three, if necessary, would be next Tuesday at 5:45 p.m. at Roy Hollar.

James Boydars slides safely into third base with a steal as the ball eludes the White Sox third baseman during Thursday's opening game of the Sanford Little Major League City Championship Series. Boydars came on to pitch in the seventh inning and saved the Braves' 1-0 victory. Game two will be Saturday at 6:30 p.m.

"This was a great defensive game, and it came down to a wild throw," said Braves coach Ken Dryden. "I wasn't expecting the White Sox to be this tough. We're just trying to take it one game at a time like we have all year. That's all we can do." Bertrand reached second base on a two-base error to lead off the seventh, advanced to third when Chris Witte grounded out to first base, and scored what proved to be the winning run on an error.

Danny Johnson drew a lead off walk for the White Sox in the bottom of the seventh, and took second when Kenny Scott was hit by a pitch one out later. James Soydars, who relieved winning pitcher Tyler Drake at the start of the inning, then struck out the next two White Sox batters to end the game and earn the save just before a severe thunderstorm hit the area.

"I told our team before the game that the team that made the first mistake would probably lose," said White Sox coach Frank Hicks. "This was a good game, and the Braves are a good team. We just need to come out Saturday and play the kind of baseball that got us here." Both teams had several scoring opportunities in the first two innings, but the opposing defenses were able to escape the threats. Darrell Jackson drew a walk and Frank Martin singled with two out for the White Sox in the first inning. The runners moved up on a double steal, but a pop up ended the threat.

Soydars doubled for the Braves with one out in the second inning, then stole third on the next pitch. The White Sox defense then got stingy as Josiah Smith struck out the next batter and then got Robert Vanatta to end the inning on a grounder to strand Soydars at third. The Braves got another scoring threat when Tyler Drake doubled with two outs in the fourth inning and advanced to third on a White Sox error. Soydars followed by hitting a fly ball that appeared to be going over the head of Johnson. The White Sox left fielder, but Johnson quickly backpedaled and made the catch to end the inning as he fell to the ground.

In the fifth inning, Vanatta and Bertrand had consecutive one-out singles for the Braves, and Heckle walked one out later to load the bases. But the White Sox escaped that threat when Vanatta was forced out at home on a fielder's choice by Jason Bondheim. Eddie Dougherty singled to lead off the White Sox fifth inning, took second when Johnson walked, and advanced to third on a passed ball that moved Johnson to second. Drake then struck out the next batter as the Braves defense ended the threat by recording outs on the next three batters.

ALTAMONTE SPRINGS — Seminole County high school baseball will be represented at the College World Series by three alumni who now play for Andy Lopez at the University of Florida. When the Gators (48-16) take the field at 1 p.m. (WCPX, Channel 8 will televise the game) Saturday for a first round CWS game versus arch-rival Florida State at Rosenblatt Stadium in Omaha, Neb., two Seminole alumni and one Lake Brantley graduate will be in UF's starting lineup.

"People used to talk about the high school baseball talent down near Tampa and Miami, but the talent in Central Florida is just as good as it is anywhere else," said Lake Brantley coach Mike Smith. "It does everybody in the county good to see those kids in the College World Series. It's exciting, and it makes us all proud." Lake Brantley graduate Eric Castaldo is joined on the UF roster by Seminole high products David and Rick Eckstein. The "so-called" experts said the trio would never make it in college baseball. Lightning, rain halts softball action

SANFORD — Mother Nature put on quite a fireworks display around 7:30 p.m. Thursday night, then for good measure added some rain to once again put a halt to Sanford Recreation Department men's slowpitch softball league action.

But at least this time a couple of games were, one each at Chase and Pinehurst parks. At Chase Park, Craig Meriberson lined a one-out single to right field in the bottom of the seventh inning to score Alonso Brundridge as Franklin Ball Bonds remained undefeated with a 5-4 victory over Ken Rummel Chevrolet.

The games between Beer:30 and Rib Ranch and Rib Ranch and Crazy Wings were suspended to a later date. Franklin Ball Bonds is now 5-0 and is trailed by Rib Ranch (3-1), Ken Rummel Chevrolet (3-3), Beer:30 (1-4) and Crazy Wings (0-5). Next week, Crazy Wings challenges Franklin Ball Bonds at 6:30 p.m. and Ken Rummel Chevrolet plays the doubleheader against Beer:30 at 7:30 p.m. and Rib Ranch at 8:30 p.m.

At Pinehurst Park, Tom Vesina scored on an error in the fourth inning and McConnell Towing went on to blank Schwan's 4-0.

M.T. Muggs had a doubleheader with Invacare and Haley Construction postponed to a later date. McConnell Towing is now 5-1, while Invacare is 4-1. Completing the standings are M.T. Muggs (3-1), Schwan's (1-5) and Haley Construction. See Softball, Page 2B.
