the havor it can do to peace of mind.

There are ways you can rout the needless noise egre at home, in the office, the store, the factory and where you relax and play.

One way is to see to it that by being thoughtful and considerate you don't personally contribute unnecessarily to the rising neise level. The other way is to use the devices and materials that modern science and research have devaloped to reduce unwanted sound.

One method is by means of acoustical materials, which are composed of fibrous substances, usually prefabricated into perforated or fissured tile. Such tile is now a familiar sight on the ceilings of offices, restaurants, factories, clubs, hotal lobbies, and other places where people congregate and work. It even plays a large role in the improvement of acoustics in theatres, churches, auditoriums, gymnaliums and other large rooms.

These materials do not reduce the original loudness of noise. However, they do absorb much of its energy and prevent it from spreading and bouncing off hard surfaces creating a jumbled sound pattern.

Thus the contributions of science pattern.

Thus the contributions of science in the field of sound conditioning can help us to avert many of the noises that now annoy.

Cutting Libraries

The idea must still exist that in education anything more than reading, writing rad arithmetic is a waste of time. People tolerate the schools, though they go beyond the three R's, but do not know that valuable education can also come from libraries.

Ohio is facing this sort of opposition to public libraries. The city governments have ganged up on the libraries, and want to cut down the latters' share of tax money, so that more can go to the cities. A bill in the legislature would limit libraries to 35 per cent of their present none too ample funds, so that more may be spent on city activities. Told that this cut would mean that libraries could open only two days a week and buy only one third of the books they needed, a spokesman of the cities said, "What of it?"

Fortunately this gentleman seems to be in a minority. Educators and disinterested citizens have raised a clamor against the proposed cut, and the newspapers have done yeoman service also.

At present the chances for the bill's passage seem poor. Unfortunately such dangers often recur with each legislative Only once did Christ prescribe so drastic a step. It is not unchristien to retain working capital. Just the contrary.

Politics And The Court

Chief Justice Earl Warren's positive refusal to be a presidential candidate under any circumstance or condition is in line with the Supreme Court's best traditions. This tradition, however, did not develop until years after the establishment of the for governor of New York while still on the bench. Defeated the first time, he was elected three years later, then resigned.

In the first half of the 19th century John McLean, postmaster-general under John Quincy Adams and an appointee to the court by Jackson, never gave up presidential ambitions. He was often talked of, and in the Republicans' first convention. in 1856, came near being nominated, the decision finally going to John C. Fremont. Although 75, McLean still had hopes in 1860, when Lincoln was chosen. His aspirations apparently ended only at his death in Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase was notoriously eager for the presidency, and had considerable backing in the Democratic convention in 1868. Then for a while the court ceased to be considered an abode of presidential possibilities. The lull ended in 1916, when Charles E. Hughes was ill-advised enough to accept the Republican nomination, offered because his position on the bench had kept him out of party brawls. His narrow defeat may have been partly caused by disapproval of political activity

Since then all justices have discouraged political speculation. Warren's decision should end the idea once and for all.

HOLLYWOOD UN-What kind of guy is James Dean?

Film fans who saw "East of Eden" have been asking that. In his first important film, he emerged as a star of first magnitude. No other debut of a virtual unknown in recent years has appeared so auspicious. A great deal has been written about Dean since his rise to fame. and much of it has been spurious. The real Dean was observed at close range on the location of "Rebel Without a Cause," his second starring film. He was emoting at the Griffith Park Observatory, which overlooks Los Angeles. At first he doesn't seem too impressive in person. He is not so tall as most leading men. He resses casually and mingles with the other young actors who are portraying juvenile delinquents in the film. He generally wears hornrimmed glasses, with clip-on dark lenses when he's in the sun.
