Christmas Business

Some who deplore the gradually increasing commercial aspects of Christmas and of the spirit of giving which predominates it, will gain little popularity this year by expressing such sentiments. Christmas should, and does, mean much more than an opportunity for merchants to dispose of their goods, but in any period of hard times when ledger sheets for all months in the year, perhaps, except December, are written in the red, or at least in shell pink, the illustrated page to quoting formone good month finds a hearty welcome.

"Experts in retail trade," the Miami Daily News declares, "estimate that $2,600,000,000 will be spent in the da." That may be putting it a wee United States during the four weeks preceding Christmas bit strongly, but here are facts: in stores affected by Christmas shopping. Of this total $1,300,000,000, would be the normal increase due to the purchase of gifts. Employment will be given to approxi-

A World To Gain

A "practical" person, in common parlance, is a person who keeps his feet on the ground, who regards the means as well as the end, who does not indulge overmuch in idle dreams of success or vague plans to attain the unattainable. In a more limited sense, a practical person has come to mean one who is concerned chiefly with the physical aspects of existence whose common denominator is money.

The odd thing about this fetish is that for many people, to treat money and its accumulation as the be-all and end-all of existence is highly impractical, for it means continued discomfort and unhappiness-and anyone who deliberately lets himself in for unpleasantness isn't very practical.

The greatest-if sometimes unconscious-desire of hudug his state out of the man creatures is for happiness, in some form or another. The struggle to attain the state is and has always been the follows: major preoccupation of mankind. Insofar as a man learns wherein happiness will lie for him, and strives to attain the condition resolutely and intelligently, to that extent is he practical in the broadest application of the term.

To attempt to lay down a single rule whereby all men can achieve happiness or contentment even, is the height of stupidity. That is why mass judgments are never valid for all. The modern conviction (or is it strictly modern?) that gold is a panacea for all human tils, does not work out in practice, in every instance.

Among the unhappiest of mortais are many who do culbertson bid a diamond, Lenz not lack for wealth. Then the dry cause has lost ground to a body and mind are at least as essential to happiness as the fireworks started. Culturison bid certain extent because the dry size of one's bank account.

To confuse "practical" with materialistic is a common error. To define "success" narrowly as the mere accumulation of material wealth, is to demean the word.
