Helpful Hints To Best Treat Acne

DEAR DR. LAMB-I am a 19year-old male who has been visiting dermatology offices for four years because of an acne problem. What I would like to know is what causes acne? Is there any way to get rid of it before you outgrow it? What body changes occur to stop it? My current doctor's treatment consists of washing with an abradant cleanser and applying a clear liquid prescription, then applying a thick white liquid. I was taking pills, but this doctor current thinking is about found they were affecting my treating it.

Florida Power & Light Co. engineer Bruce Berger offers the following tips to help you use electricity more efficiently.

Your air conditioner unit should have a routine checkup annually by a qualified serviceman. The filter should be cleaned or changed regularly as a dirty filter restricts air flow and reduces the efficiency of the air conditioner Use shrubbery shading outside walls and trees shading the roof to help reduce the amount of cooling required. Awnings, lightcolored drapes and venetian blinds can reduce the sun's heat penetrating the inside of your home by as much as 75 percent. Avoid direct sunshine on the air conditioning unit as well. But shrubbery should not be planted so close it will reduce air flow and increase cost. Ceiling insulation, weather stripping for doors and an attic

The FAA And Collisions

A shocking picture of indifference toward the safety recommendations of air traffic controllers at major airports has emerged from within the Federal Aviation Administration.

The public is left with the uneasy conclusion that the FAA is not doing everything it can to prevent the kind of air collision that had such horrible consequences over San Diego Sept 25.

A Lindbergh Field controller had seen enough near-misses in the sky over San Diego to tile an unsatisfactory condition report (UCR) almost 18 months ago, urging that Lindbergh traffic be brought under a more sophisticated anti-collision radar system.

His warning that "any day someone could die" wound up in an FAA filing cabinet.

After the loss of 144 lives in the San Diego tragedy, it took the National Transportation Safety Board only four weeks to conclude that Lindbergh needs the upgraded control system - the same recommendation that controller Steve Gibby made in May of 1977.

Why did Mr. Gibby's UCR reach a bureaucratic dead-end? Why are so many air controllers at major U.S. airports telling reporters they fear being branded as "troublemakers" if they call attention to unsafe traffic conditions?

Why was the advanced radar system included in the budget for Lindbergh Field's control tower for three consecutive years and rejected by the

We can understand that private pilots resist regulations that would require investment in radar transponders for their planes, but as the skies over major airports become saturated with traffic, they are putting economics ahead of safety.

If the FAA for any reason cannot supply the equipment and personnel to provide the highest degree of safety attainable at a busy airport, then what has it done to change the conditions which aggravate the threat of collisions?

This leads to the central issue of whether both commercial and general aviation operations should be permitted at the same airport when the amount of traffic is causing controllers to break out in a cold sweat.

By MAX ERKILETIAN

the-scenes struggle has developed within the Carter administration over the extent of the federal government's commitment to solar energy as a source of power in the 21st century.

The previously unpublicized conflict has been confined in recent months to the Domestic Policy Review on Solar Energy, a government-wide task force established last spring by President Carter to propose solar options for the future. The policy dispute is likely to erupt in public before the end of this year because members of the study group are in disagreement over vir-tually every fundamental issue relating both the character and scope of the federal commitment to solar energy.

Compounding the problem are the conflicting signals that have come during the past year from the president, who initially proposed a sharply reduced budget for solar research and development during the current fiscal year. But soon after the potential of solar energy began to capture the imagination of the public, Carter dramatically shifted his position and made a "Sun Day" pilgrimage to the federal government's Solar Energy Research Institute in Colorado

In a speech there, Carter announced that he had instructed the Department of Energy (DOE) to shift $100 million of its current funding. initially earmarked for nuclear programs, to

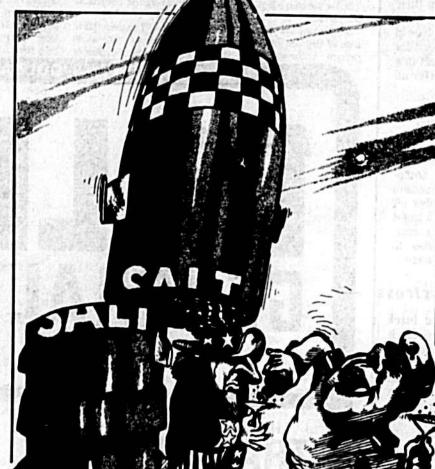

He quoted with approval a Council on Environmental Quality (CEQ) study which estimated "that we could meet as much as onefourth of our energy demands from solar sources by the end of this continue, and perhaps more then half by the year 2020."

The study group is composed of representatives of approximately 30 federal departments and agencies. But DOE dominates its work because it controls the secretariat, Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger is chairman of the full task force and another DOE official heads a key subcommittee.

Many DOE officials, long committed to the wholesale expansion of the country's nuclear Industry officials want the Environmental service station's storage tanks. power capability, have been notably cool toward Protection Agency to accept the new system as a Tests of that system have turned up several

Although Carter endorsed the goal of using solar power to meet 25 percent of all national energy needs by the year 2000, the study group figure was in the 15-to-30 percent range and now has lowered that estimate to only 9-to-15 percent.

What does it mean to be a county agent? "We're trying to make research findings usable to the local producer," says Dunlap "Each county is different. I like it because we're accountable to the local people. We listen to them but we're not obligated to listen 160 percent." The county agent is an arm of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Extension Service now reorganized into USDA's Science and Education Administration.

The Extension Service was born early in this century when USDA sent a teacher named Seaman A. Knapp to East Texas to eradicate the boll weevil. A farmer named Walter C. Porter olunteered 70 acres to demonstrate Knapp's scientific methods. At the growing season's end Porter netted $10 an acre more on his 70 acres than he did on the rest of his cotton acreage. Within a year 1,000 instructional meetings had been held in the cotton area. Knapp's ideas spread and in 1914 Congress enacted the Smith-Lever Act, which provides that each state should have an extension service conduct adult education for farmers, and take ti rural folks the results of research going on, but little-used, in the states' land-grant colleges and

An Endless Money Supply?

TALLAHASSEE (UPI)— With only a week of campaigning left before election day, Florida candidates continue to pull in a seemingly endless supply of money from political supporters.

Campaign reports filed Monday with the state elections office showed Democrat Bob Graham enjoyed a record week, taking in $280,311 which was enough to boost him to $2.27 million mark in contributions.

Republican Jack Eckerd, meanwhile, contributed more than half the $114,312 in new money to his campaign, giving $65,000 of his own. This helped the Clearwater drugstore magnate to a campaign total of $2.83 million.

This still left South with a chance to make his contract He won the spade return, led a trump and stuck in his eight. It wasn't much of a chance, but it succeeded. East held both the jack and 10 of trumps and after this deep sea finesse they weren't going to do him any good at all.
