Community Banding Together To Fight Drug Abuse

By Donna Estes
Herald Staff Writer

Persons interested in doing something about widespread drug and alcohol abuse by young people will meet Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. at Lake Mary High School to form a task force to combat the problem.

And at many schools in the Central Florida area where forums were held in conjunction with the showing of The Chemical People television program earlier this week, similar plans are being made to create such task forces.

At the forum held at Lake Mary High School Wednesday night, about 100 parents and students listened intently as a former Lyman High School student told of his drug and alcohol problems and Dawn Salfi, the daughter of Seminole Circuit Judge and Mrs. Domitiek Salfi, told a similar story.

Meanwhile, Joan Schalls, guidance counselor at Rock Lake Middle School, said a random survey of both middle and high school students two years ago revealed that while middle school students will listen to their parents advice about drugs, high school students are impressed the most by testimony from former drug users.

In response to a question about the reasons for not getting involved with drugs, the majority of students in the survey listed health risks as the most important, with harm to family second and the legal risk third.

Dawn Salfi told the LMHS group that she "did drugs" for two years and participated in rehabilitation therapy for about the same length of time.

"At first I did very few drugs," she said, adding that within one month, however, her life started going downhill. "I didn't care about myself," she said. "In the drug rehabilitation program, no one did drugs and the peer pressure to stay straight helped me.

"I found I can still have fun and be myself and be straight," she said.

She said a key in a druggie keeping straight is having someone to talk to — a parent or a friend — about the things bothering you. "By getting together and supporting other kids we help ourselves keep straight," Dawn said.

Mrs. Salfi said she had trouble admitting her child was on drugs. "I didn't want my parenting questioned," she said.

"It was painful to put Dawn in a drug program, but it was the best decision we ever made," she said. Mrs. Salfi warned parents that they "can't stand with a martini in your hand and tell your child he can't smoke marijuana. Alcohol is also a drug. I gave up alcohol one month before Dawn gave up drugs," she said.

She also cautioned parents who have alcohol around the house to keep it locked up in a cabinet.

The former Lyman student, now finishing his education at Lake Mary, said he did the whole gamut of drugs at the school, beginning with alcohol and moving on to pot, hash, cocaine, THC, PCP and others. "I felt worthless about life," he said. The boy said the best prevention is parental intervention.

The youth said he too underwent drug rehabilitation and is now leading a drug-free life.

Dr. Luis Perez, a Sanford physician and one of those who started the "Grove," a Longwood counselling program for drug abusing young people, offered any help he can give in creating task forces.

"When drugs are used in the right way, they are helpful. In the wrong way, they are deadly," Perez said.

Golden Age Games

Event Takes Its Place In Record Books

By Jane Casselberry
Herald Staff Writer

With the last mile run, the last horseshoe tossed, and the last croquet ball knocked through the wicket, the ninth annual Golden Age Games came to a close today.

"Things went exceedingly well this week," Games General Chairman Jim Jernigan said. "We've seen a lot of new faces and a lot of good competitors this year. I don't see any big problems."

Jernigan said there were close to 4,000 seniors 55 and older entered in the week-long competition which got underway with the "Fallen Arches Stampede" parade and opening ceremonies highlighted by the appearance of honorary chairman and vice president of the U.S. Olympic Committee, Jack Kelly of Philadelphia.

The Holiday Inn on the Sanford Marina said the Golden Age Games was full all week and a 50-kesman said the Games were responsible. "They started checking in Monday and continued all week. They began to check out on Friday," she said.

Mrs. Elaine Zadow, who along with her husband, Gary, owns the Slumberland Motel on U.S. Highway 17-92, also noted an increase in business. "We only have 15 rooms so we only reserve four for the entire week for Games participants, because we don't want to turn away regulars who stay two weeks to two months. But we've had several others from the Games who were here one or two days during the week. We had four check in Friday to be here for the track and field on Saturday. Local restaurants also benefited from the influx of seniors into Sanford for the Games. "We've seen a lot of new faces here this week thanks to the Games and people coming back from the north for the winter," Billy Howell, assistant manager for Granny's Kitchen in downtown Sanford.

And what is in store in the future for the Golden Age Games? "We will probably be expanding to add some additional activities," predicted Jernigan. "We are considering several including rowing. We're also looking into improving our facilities, possibly using private money to develop good facilities in the future, but at this point it's all guesswork."

Grindle Seeks Stiffer Child Abuse Penalty

By Charles Cobb
Herald Staff Writer

Representative Art Grindle says a proposal to toughen Florida's child abuse law stands a "ninety-five percent chance" of being enacted into law by the Florida Legislature.

The Altamonte Springs Republican said he will sponsor a bill during the next legislative session to add aggravated child abuse to Florida's felony-murder law, thereby making the crime punishable by death.

Assistant State Attorney Don Marblestone, prosecutor in the recent torture-murder case of 5-year-old Ursula Sunshine Assaid, recommended the law be stiffened in letters to Gov. Bob Graham and several legislators last week.

Marblestone, who prosecuted Donald McDougall for the death of the Assaid child, said that if his proposal becomes law, anyone who kills a child by abusing it could be convicted of first-degree murder, even if the death was unintended.

The state's felony-murder law specifies certain offenses which can be punishable by death or life imprisonment with a minimum of 25 years to be served behind bars if a person dies during the commission of the crime. Examples of such felonies are arson, sexual battery and robbery.

Under existing law, unless the state can prove the death was premeditated, aggravated child abuse which results in death is classified as second-degree murder and can bring a maximum penalty of up to life in prison with no minimum jail time, or third-degree murder which carries a maximum penalty of 15 years in prison, Marblestone said.

McDougall, 27, was convicted Oct. 22 of second-degree murder and aggravated child abuse in the death of the Assaid girl who died Sept. 25, 1982. The girl's body was found stuffed in a sack in a pond in Altamonte Springs.

McDougall was sentenced Nov. 4 to 34 years in prison for murder, 11 years on the child abuse charge, and one year for each of two bad check charges.

He could be out of jail within about 17 years, Marblestone said.

"It is next to impossible to prove premeditation in cases where a child dies from an aggravated child abuse situation," Marblestone said.

"I feel the young children of our state need this protection. This will make a child abuser think twice or three or four times before embarking on that course of action. If the child is injured because of his abuse, the abuser will be more likely to get medical attention for the child

Schools' Old Guard Bowing Out

By Michael Beha
Herald Staff Writer

There's a changing of the guard taking place in the upper echelons of the Seminole County School District.

Eleven administrators who've helped shape district policy for nearly 30 years have retired in the past year or will retire within the next few months.

"It's a time of transition for the district," said School Superintendent Robert Hughes. "We've had enormous growth in the district in the past decade. We've gone from being a rural district to the 11th largest in the state in 10 years."

Hughes said he appreciated the many years of service of the retirees.

"They represent the best of the management style they learned under," Hughes said.

He said running a school district has "gotten much more complicated during the past decade."

Local districts do not have the independence they had 10 years ago in administering their own programs, he said.

Assistant Superintendent for Business and Finance Roger Harris agreed that developing a district's budget has gotten more complicated.

"The state has its hands in everything," he said. "And they mandate us to handle programs but don't give us all the funds we need to administer them."

The district has been reorganizing its administrative personnel over the past two years. Added have been two new assistant superintendent posts which are responsible for administrative services, facilities and transportation.

"We're trying to reorganize to suit our needs better," said Hughes, adding, however, that the reshuffling has upset some administrators and has probably prompted some of them to retire.

"We've not intimidated anybody. But I know that some people aren't as happy with my style of doing things as they were with the previous superintendent," he said.

Hughes said the transition has been smooth so far and should continue. "The retirees have been willing to help the new people. Some have come in after they retired while others have been available for questions."

He said the changes will not bring about any major policy shifts, but should make it easier for the district to take the actions it needs to cope with growth.

Harris heads the list of retirees. He has worked in the district for 38 years as a teacher, internal auditor, textbook and warehouse manager and director of purchasing before becoming assistant superintendent

WORLD IN BRIEF

PLO's Arafat Braces For Final Showdown

TRIPOLI, Lebanon (UPI) — Yasser Arafat's fighters dug earthen barricades outside Tripoli today to repel an anticipated weekend showdown with Palestinian rebels besieging his last Lebanese stronghold.

Arafat refused Friday to honor a pledge to evacuate Lebanon's second largest city despite appeals from the city's prominent Moslem leaders to flee and spare civilians a potential bloodbath.

He said he could not abandon his fighters while they faced danger from the rebels and what he claimed was two divisions of Syrian army troops and 1,000 Libyan mercenaries.

Officials said 388 people have been killed and 859 wounded since the rebel blitz began 10 days ago.

The rebels want to expel Arafat from his remaining Lebanese base and end his 14-year reign of the Palestine Liberation Organization, claiming he has grown corrupt and no longer seeks open confrontation with Israel.

Reagan Reassures S. Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — President Reagan embraced the tense South Korean government today and prepared for a church service with American troops at the Demilitarized Zone separating the nation from its bitter rival North Korea.

Reagan, who said he came to the anti-communist outpost "to draw attention to a great contrast" between North and South Korea, told the National Assembly: "You are not alone, people of Korea. America is your friend and we stand with you."

The United States has 40,000 troops in the country, 10,000 of them in the DMZ.

Chun's authoritarian regime is under pressure from two sides — the generation-old belligerency of North Korea and increasing opposition at home from human rights activists.

The Washington Post said today that hundreds of dissidents were reported to be under house arrest for the duration of Reagan's visit.

Flushed And Foiled

CANNES, France (UPI) — A bank employee with sharp ears helped police foil a heist by a pair of "sewer rats."

Police waded through knee-deep muck in Cannes' sewer system Friday to snare two would-be thieves — armed with pumps, ventilators, compressors and hydraulic jacks — who bored a hole beneath the bank building, officers said.

They said they were alerted to the possibility of a heist by an employee who heard strange noises while passing in front of the branch of the Credit Commercial de France in the posh Mediterranean sea resort.

Dozens of officers were posted at every manhole along the principal drain to back up their colleagues underground.

Police said they found more than one ton of equipment under the bank, which they said would have taken about a month to bring through the complex municipal sewer system.

Following Return Of Democracy

Optimism Running Strong In Argentina

By Gerl Smith

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (UPI) — After more than 7 years of repression and economic chaos under military rule, Argentines are bubbling with optimism over the charismatic leader they elected to lead the nation out of turmoil.

"I feel as if we are emerging from a dark tunnel and cementing the exit closed so we will never suffer through this again," Victor Cipolla, a 26-year-old law student, said of Raul Alfonsín's election as president in balloting Oct. 30.

Alfonsín, a 56-year-old lawyer, will be inaugurated Dec. 10 as leader of 28 million Argentines, many of whom are convinced this is their last chance to assure a democratic future for the country.

The optimism runs strong, in contrast to several months ago when cynics were taking bets on how long any elected government could last before the labor unions or armed forces brought it down.

Alfonsín's 51 percent share of the vote gave his center-left Radical Civic Union party a clear mandate.

"We are convinced that Alfonsín's election has spelled an end, forever, to our long cycle of military coups here," said top Alfonsín aide Enrique Vanoli. "This government will last its entire six-year term in office."

Vanoli's optimism is remarkable given Argentina's recent history. In the past 53 years, only two democratically elected presidents — both of them army generals — completed their full term in office.

The balloting that gave Alfonsín the presidency was Argentina's first election in a decade.

The vote reversed a half century trend during which Argentina was ruled by either military officers or the populist party formed by three-time president Juan Domingo Peron, who died in 1974.

Many Peronist voters in blue collar areas voted for Alfonsín, a career politician and human rights activist from the upper middle classes. They did so because — unlike the Peronists — Alfonsín promised drastic changes.

The president-elect pledged to end corruption, slash the military budget and restructure the armed forces in a way that would prevent coups.

He also promised to order the powerful Peronist labor unions to hold free leadership elections that would make them more democratic and less able to bring the country to its knees with a single strike.

Alfonsín, who compares himself to the liberal

Democrats of the United States or the Social Democrats of Europe, plans to convene Congress immediately after the inauguration to push through a series of important reforms he says could make his first 100 days in office look like President Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal in the United States.

According to Alfonsín's advisers, those reforms include:

— A purge of officers who took part in the outgoing military government or were responsible for the Falkland Islands war.

— A proposal to Congress that would abolish the posts of commander-in-chief of each of the armed forces to reduce the likelihood of military coups.

— Dispatching Economy Minister Bernardo Grinspun to negotiate with international banks over improved interest rates and better repayment terms for Argentina's $40 billion foreign debt.

— Economic measures designed to control Argentina's 925 percent inflation and protect its dwindling foreign currency reserves.

— Introduction of an ambitious housing program that would revitalize the depressed construction industry and reduce unemployment.

To Marines In Lebanon, Peacekeeping Is Hard Duty

By Tom Tiede

BEIRUT (NEA) — Everything seemed routine when members of Bravo Company of the 24th Marine Amphibious Unit landed in Lebanon last spring. They were replacing a sister force that had completed a relatively quiet peacekeeping term here, and there was no reason to think their own tour would be different.

So they unloaded tons of recreational gear along with the implements of their mission. And they set up barbecue pits and volleyball nets near the howitzers and sandbagged bunkers. They were ready for action, and kept a sharp watch, but the reality was that the deadliest enemy in Beirut at the time was boredom.

One lad wrote home in June that he was yawning so much his face had wrinkled. Another asked his commanding officer if he could organize visits to the Beirut public library. Some of the soldiers had to jog to keep active, and others simply winked out and got fat in the shade of eucalyptus trees.

Then in August the terrible guns of change erupted. And quiet time was the first casualty. The factions that had been fighting each other in Lebanon suddenly began to fire on Americans as well, and the U.S. Marines were not again to enjoy a moment of the peace they were supposed to be keeping.

Now Bravo Company is itself being replaced. The men are going home by ship this month after 26 weeks in which the U.S. presence in Beirut has been colored by blood and brutality. Nearly 250 Marines have been slaughtered, scores more have been hurt (most of them in a single bomb attack); it has been six months of the unexpected.

One of the things the men of the company did not expect was the fragility of the base of their deployment. The unit has occupied an exposed semicircle at the southern end of Beirut International airport. The area is flat and barren; the only real cover is provided by sandbags and earth moving machines.

Worse, the field is directly beneath a range of mountains that rise 3,000 feet from sea level and contain dozens of competing Lebanese militias. Several of the militias have fired on the Marines. A few of them have put up outposts that are within 200 yards of B Company's perimeter.

The Marines say their position defies every rule of deployment. A lieutenant thinks it's the worst defensive placement in modern American military history. "It's not right," the officer complains. "No one should be allowed to stick Marines in a place like this. I mean, right out in the open."

The complaint is unusually candid for a Leatherneck. The men in Bravo Company have been told to refrain from public criticism. Besides this, they have been trained to obey without question. Alone, they sometimes open up; in the company of others, however, they go along with group policy.

"I don't have any complaints, sir," says a man who is seated next to an eavesdropping warrant officer. "I volunteered for the Marines. I knew there were hazards. If the shooting starts, sir, I can jump behind the sandbags. I'm safe there. I think I'm safe. Yes, I know I'm safe there, sir."

Pfc. Don Kelley of St. Louis says he joined the Marines because he needed a job. He is 20 years old, and the job he got is to stand guard at the most remote post in the company defense. The post is a bunker that is built aside a road that leads from the airport to the main highway from Beirut.

It's dark and it's damp. Kelley walks one way on the road, and then the other. Now and then a rifle round flies over. Sometimes he doesn't even know it. "I used to be scared out here," he grins. "you don't know what's going to happen. But I don't think about it anymore. You can get used to anything."

Bravo Company commander, Monty Hoover, says everyone here has been scared to one degree or another. But it's not good form to discuss it. Eighty percent of the men are under 20, and all of them like to act much older; that means they normally cover their inexperience with machismo and swagger.

And they've earned the right. The Marine Corps is the most demanding of the four U.S. services, and the men are some of the best trained ground soldiers in the world. They shave their heads, they lift weights, and for all their tender years they at least look like they can chew on glass.

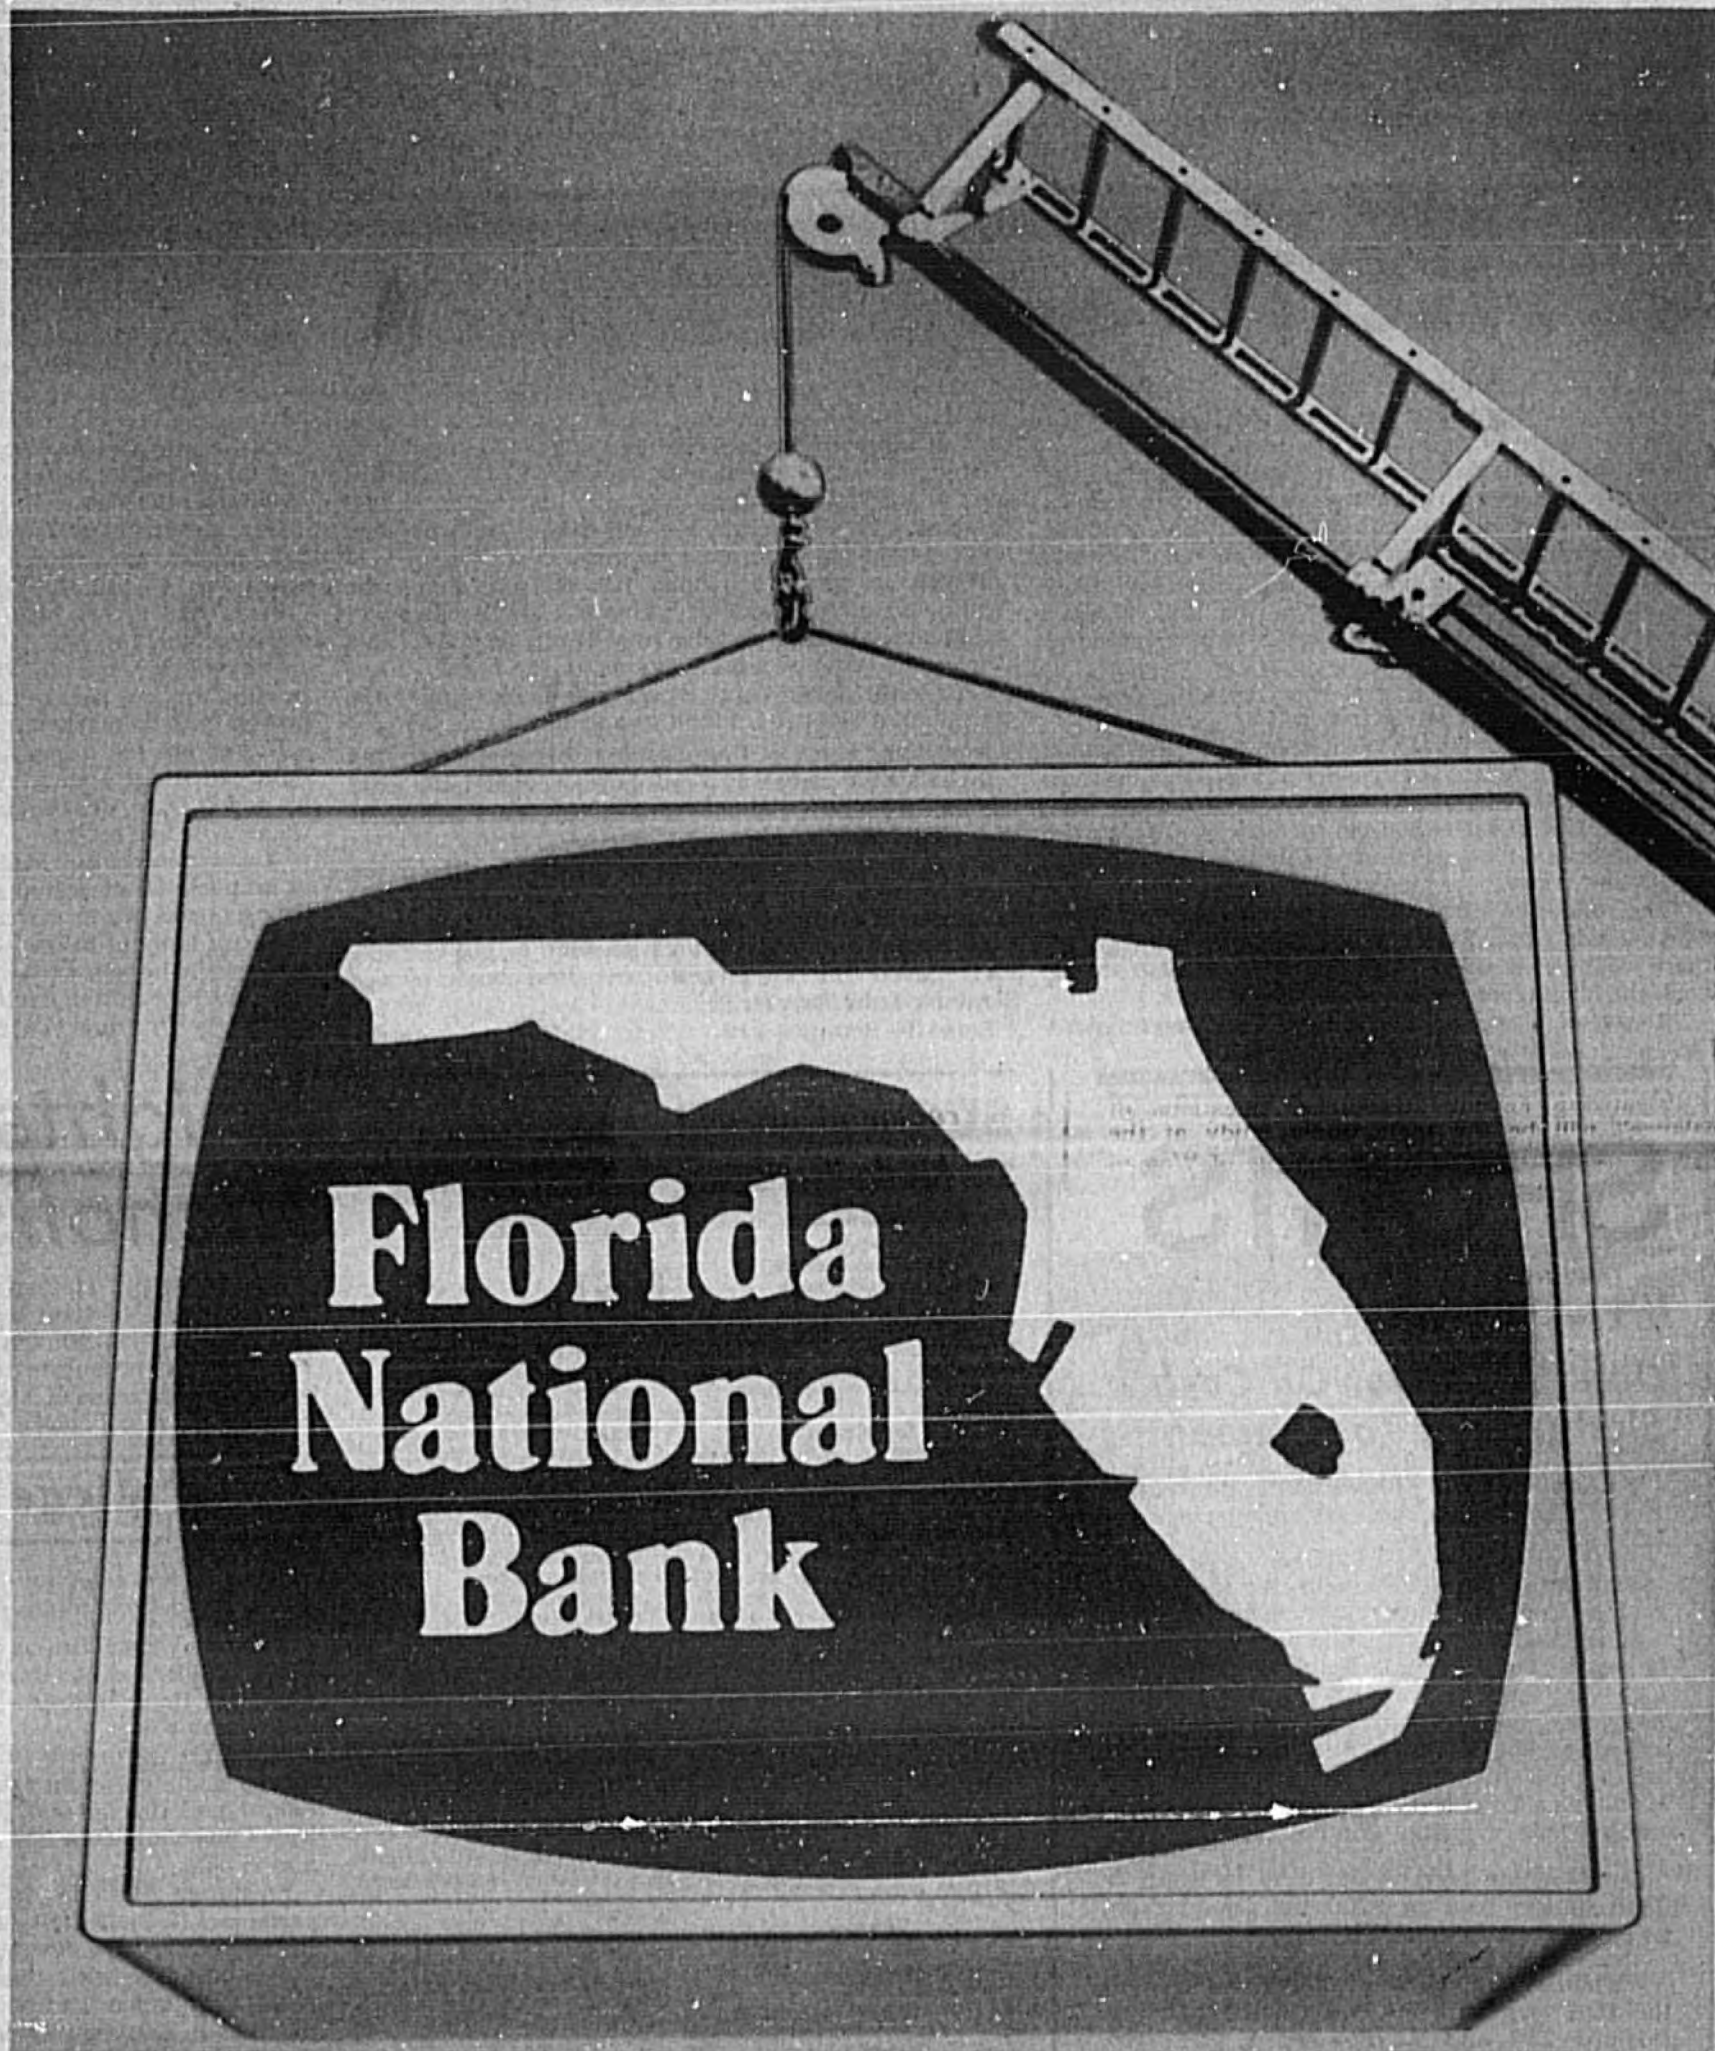

That's glass, not grass. Drugs have not been much of a problem among Marines in Beirut. Even alcohol has been limited to one beer per man during the week, two beers per man on Saturdays and Sundays. The public information office says no one has been found drunk or stoned in Bravo Company.

Indeed, no one has gotten in much trouble at all in the last 26 weeks. Warrant Officer Charles Rowe says one Marine in another unit has been investigated for firing his rifle without permission, and sent back to the United States. But that's it. "Discipline," Rowe adds, "has been outstanding."

Even the shooting incident is considered somewhat trivial. Most of the men here have been tempted to do the same thing. "When someone fires at you, you think about firing back," says Pfc. James Smith of Philadelphia. "I think it's OK to do that. I wish we could fire back a lot more than we do."

A U.S. Marine lifts weights to keep in shape while confined to peacekeeping duty at the Beirut airport. Besides the violence of Lebanon's civil war, Americans must also contend with loneliness and frustration. How do they do it? They play volleyball, jog, read or write letters home. What they don't do is drugs or booze, according to Marine officials. What they would like to do, however, is get into action. Not the kind they saw last month when a terrorist drove an explosive-laden truck into their compound, killing over 230 of their buddies. They, as one leatherneck put it, would like "to fire back a lot more than we do" at the people shooting at them.

It's Hard To Say 'No' When Help Is Needed

By Susan Loden
Herald Staff Writer

Former educator William L. Hamilton's eyes shine with pride when he speaks of the thanks he has received from fellow senior citizens.

The 78-year-old Oviedo man was honored on Oct. 1, with the 10th Annual Louella Dirksen Award, a plaque presented at Sea World's Luau Terrace.

The Louella Dirksen Award, sponsored by Sea World and Eastern Airlines, recognizes outstanding community service for and by the aging. It is a memorial to the wife of the late Sen. Everett Dirksen.

Mrs. Dirksen, like Mr. Hamilton, devoted her later years to the elderly. The award was named in her honor in 1979, after her death.

Hamilton was nominated for the award by representatives of the Casselberry Multi-purpose Senior Center.

He is on the board of directors of that center and speaks and works for seniors in many forums, including the Florida Governor's Conference on Aging.

Hamilton said the elderly need to "get out and meet their peers, talk over their shared problems and not sit at home worrying."

He helped establish the Federation of Senior Citizens Clubs of Seminole County, a group that support to the elderly with a "meals-on-wheels" program and transportation to help them out of their homes.

He is an active voice on the East Central Florida Regional Planning Council and is focusing on long-term care for the elderly.

In an interview, Hamilton explained his dedication: "I have a selfish reason for the work I do; I plan to get old someday and I might need to go into a home. I want to make sure people know how to take care of the elderly."

Senior citizens have Hamilton's attention. He said, "It's hard to say no when help is needed. The thing I miss out on doing might be just the thing God wants me to do, so I'd be afraid to stop."

But when Hamilton retired in 1971, he did leave behind a life-time dedication to a younger generation. He said he still sees his "children," former Seminole County students, but was ready to move on to other interests when he gave up his principal's post at Midway Elementary School, east of Sanford.

Hamilton, who has a bachelor of arts degree from Bethune Cookman College and a master's degree in education from Tuskegee Institute, was also principal at Rosewald Elementary School in Altamonte Springs, from 1932 to 1953.

But his career in education got off to a shaky start in 1930. He was fired after less than two years as principal of Oviedo Elementary School.

As a novice principal, he made the mistake of flunking the daughter of a member of the school's board of supervisors. In recalling that incident Hamilton called it a positive experience, because he moved onto a more rewarding position.

His service to the Seminole County school system has been recognized in a unique way. In 1984, Sanford will have a new school, Hamilton Elementary. The School, being built at the corner of Mellonville and Celery avenues, will be a monument to Hamilton and his wife, Aleatha.

When Mrs. Hamilton's 44 years as a Seminole County teacher are added to Mr. Hamilton's 41 years in education, the total is 85 years of dedication to teaching.

And daughter Wileatha, a teacher in Oviedo, and her husband, Roland Williams, chairman of the Seminole County School Board, carry on this family's tradition.

Hamilton has been honored in other areas of his life too. He was named "Master Mason of 1976-77," by the General Grand Masonic Congress of the United States. And in 1982 the Grant Chapel AME Church of Oviedo recognized his church and community service with a plaque.

Aleatha Hamilton shares her husband's most recent award and his dedication to education. Between them, they have given 85 years to education in Seminole County. Hamilton Elementary School will be a monument to the couple when completed in 1984.

Please Don't Eat The Iris

Ixora Garden Club and Central Florida Regional Hospital are sponsoring a Poisonous Plants Garden on the hospital grounds which will be open for public tours in early 1984. The November program of the Beautification and Civic Improvement Committee of the Greater Sanford Chamber of Commerce, held at the hospital, was about the garden. Marleigh Knapp, kneeling, president of IGC, explains some of the poisonous plants to CFRH assistant administrator, Mike Potter, and standing, from left, Bill Gielow, chairman of beautification committee; and Boo Ganas and Sally Rosemond, co-chairmen of the garden project.

Mom Can't Give Thanks For Misfit Son-In-Law

DEAR ABBY: My daughter recently married a man who does not fit into our family. She lives in another state, so it isn't a problem most of the time. She has invited herself and her husband to our Thanksgiving dinner, and now I am a nervous wreck thinking of having that person she married as a guest in our home.

Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: This is for the woman whose dream was to go to bed with her boss. Don't! When I started my new job, I was very much attracted to my boss and actually dreamed about what kind of lover he would be. I wanted that man in the worst way. Finally, a few months later, I got my wish.

We were involved for a few months, during which time I found out that he was selfish and inconsiderate. As a lover, on a scale from 1 to 10, he was barely a 1.

Fortunately, my husband never found out and I learned my lesson. Dreams like that are always better than reality.

WIDE-AWAKE IN DALLAS

DEAR WIDE-AWAKE: No snooze is good snooze; dreams of horsing around in the hay usually become nightmares.

DEAR ABBY: I would like to respond to "Nursing Mother," who has trouble finding a comfortable place to breast-feed her baby away from home.

A breast pump that extracts the mother's milk into a sterilized bottle is a simple solution. It is a convenient method of feeding a baby anywhere at any time.

A mother wouldn't eat in the smoky, crowded bathroom of a restaurant. Why should she feed her baby there?

FOR BREAST PUMPS

It will ruin the whole family affair. We will have to count the silver and other valuables after he has been here. I would love to see my daughter and don't want to hurt her feelings, but we just can't stand the thought of her husband being here.

Is there any way to handle this, or am I in a corner?

TRAPPED

DEAR TRAPPED: Before I can give you a helpful answer, I need to know: Is your son-in-law a known thief, or do you merely suspect that he is capable of stealing valuables from your home? If he has already stolen some silver and other valuables from you, surely your daughter is aware of it, so it would be appropriate to share your concern with her.

Although you say he doesn't "fit" into your family, he is now part of it, so if you would "love" to see your daughter, you had better make her husband welcome even if you have to lock up your valuables and use plastic tableware on Thanksgiving.

Key Club Sweetheart

Marsha Daubert of Longwood was recently elected Sweetheart for Division 25, the Florida District, Key Club International, according to David Natale, the Lieutenant Governor for the division.

Marsha is a sophomore at Lake Brantley High School. She will be representing DeLand, Lake Brantley, Lake Howell, Lyman, Oviedo, Seminole, and Winter Park High schools in statewide competition in the spring. Her election was based on both her beauty and her work in Key Club.

Marsha as a Key Clubber is a member of Key Club International, the largest high school service organization in the world with over 105,000 members in 3700 clubs throughout North America and the Caribbean. Key Club's ideals and objectives, service to home, school and the community, are similar to those of its sponsor, Kiwanis International.

IN BRIEF

United Telephone Marks 3-Millionth Installation

ALTAMONTE SPRINGS — United Telephone of Florida commemorated Tuesday the United Telephone System's installation of its three millionth customer access line.

United Telephone of Florida's Troy Todd, president, presented a gold decorator telephone to North Fort Myers' Ronald Hardy in recognition of this telecommunications milestone.

"This is a milestone in our operation because the installation took place in Florida, which is the largest and fastest growing company of the 22 telephone companies in the United Telephone System (UTS)," Todd said.

The company official explained that a customer access line provides "dial tone" and is the line and related facilities connecting a customer's telephone with the telephone company's switching equipment.

Congressional Aid Asked

ORLANDO — Florida vegetable and fruit growers are asking for assistance from Congress to assure prompt payment for the produce they sell.

Florida Fruit & Vegetable Association has presented testimony on behalf of its members before a Senate Subcommittee urging the passage of a Senate Bill which will assure that produce growers and shippers receive payment from buyers in the event of bankruptcy or refusal to pay.

According to James T. Duncan, executive vice president of the association, who made the announcement, "most Florida growers and shippers have faced the dilemma of attempting to collect for their produce from a bankrupt firm."

Because of the perishable nature of the produce, Florida growers must often ship fruits and vegetables on the basis of a telephone call. Credit checks and other safeguards utilized by commercial merchants are often unavailable or impractical because of the time involved.

Ellis Bank To Open

Ellis Bank Northeast Florida opens a Sanford branch Tuesday at 3850 Orlando Dr., just south of Lake Mary Boulevard.

During an open house 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., visitors will be able to register for prizes including gift certificates from local merchants and a Seascope cruise. Refreshments will be provided.

The bank is also inviting visitors to meet the Sanford branch staff — Jeffrey M. Pedersen of Altamonte Springs, vice president and branch manager; Bertie O. Masten, of Altamonte Springs, assistant branch manager; and staff members Becky Robinson, Linda Fowler and Celest Johnson, all of Sanford.

Pedersen was with the First National Bank of Winter Park and has 11 years experience in banking. Masten has been transferred from the Ellis Bank in Altamonte Springs.

The new branch is the 11th facility in the Ellis group. It will offer complete banking services including checking and savings accounts, loans, safety deposit boxes and drive-through windows.

There's More To Picking Cucumbers Than Meets The Eye

By Jane Casselberry
Herald Staff Writer

When you sit down to your Thanksgiving table laden with all kinds of delicious food, while pausing to give thanks give a thought to the farmworkers who planted and harvested the bounty you are enjoying.

Gov. Bob Graham has declared Nov. 20-26 "Farmworkers' Week" in Florida "in appreciation for the hard work performed by an unrecognized sector of our population."

"The efforts of farmworkers have made Florida agriculture a world leader in food production," Graham said. "It is through the farmworkers' hard work that we and our fellow Americans enjoy the most plentiful Thanksgiving of any nation on earth."

"Floridians recognize and appreciate the contributions made by farmworkers and agricultural employers in making quality farm products readily available at a reasonable price in the marketplaces."

Graham

Who are the farmworkers living and working in Seminole County? What are the problems that they face as fertile farms give way to industry and housing developments?

Pat Sentell is most likely to have the answers.

Ms. Sentell, rural manpower representative assigned to the Florida State Employment Service in Sanford, the first woman named to this position in the state, sees the farm labor situation from all sides. Her job involves working with migrants, growers, and the much maligned crew leaders.

They are all interdependent and at the mercy of many factors over which they have no control, such as the weather, inflation, and the supply and demand.

"They haven't made the machine to completely replace farm workers," she said. "When the crops are ready to be harvested, they need workers right then. One or two days can mean a difference."

For vegetables, there are basically two harvest seasons in Seminole — in the fall and April through June and the main crops are cucumbers, squash, and cabbage. The citrus harvesting season begins Dec. 1 and runs through May. She said some crews specialize in vegetables while others stick strictly to citrus.

There are Texas-Mexican crews, black crews (including some Haitians), and white crews. While some of the farmworkers in the county are brought in during the season from other areas, the majority of those employed in agriculture live here most of the year, she said.

Ms. Sentell estimates there are between 540 and 500 farmworkers employed at present (not always on a given day), but some of the crews from here are working outside the county in the Osteen, Apopka and Titusville areas.

"It has not been a good season as far as farmers or farmworkers are concerned because of too much rain," she said. "Some have been working only two or three days a week."

The agricultural economy in the county is continuing to shrink with less jobs available for farmworkers. "In the past 6-8 months we have lost two big farms," said Ms. Sentell, "which means 250 less jobs available for seasonal farmworkers. American Products Exchange (APEX) of Sanford, which specialized in 'cukes' and cabbage, and Piloan Farms near Winter Springs, which grew onions and cabbage, closed down operations. When they closed that put 150 cuke pickers out of a job."

Many of the workers put out of work by the closings were older farmworkers who had been employed for the two farms for many years.

"What are we going to do when all the farmers go out of business?" they asked Ms. Sentell.

And they will continue to go out of business, she said. "Cukes may cost 25 cents a piece in the super market, but the farmer is only getting $4 a bushel. The idea is to make a profit and in several years all the small farms will be gone and only the big diversified ones will be able to make it."

Farmers are now required to pay the $3.35 minimum wage when farmworkers are on an hourly rate. Some crops are harvested on the piece rate, which may run from 35 to 65 cents a basket for cucumbers depending on the variety, she said. "A good cuke picker can make $50-$60 a day if they are hustling."

Citrus workers are paid on a piece rate. "In my job you have to have empathy for these people," said Ms. Sentell. To gain this empathy she has worked beside them doing stoop labor in the rain and mud and has gotten a rash from scratchy vines.

"It's a rough life," she said. "they have to work in the cold, the rain, the mud, the heat, the sweat, and the snakes. It is unique work. You don't just go out there and pick cucumbers. The farmer wants you to pick a certain size and you have to know what you're doing."

"They don't work 8-5, Monday through Friday," she said. "They may

Major employers of farmworkers in the county are Duda & Sons, Nelson & Co., Clonts, and B&W Watercress, all of Oviedo, and Patrick Fruit Co., W.W. Tyre, Burk's Farms and Henry Schumacher, all of Sanford.

The growing of ornamental plants is the top-agribusiness in the county, but employment is less seasonal and employees are more apt to be year-round residents. Among these growers are Hattaway's Inc., Altamonte Springs; Bolling Farms, Longwood; and Garden Arts, Forest City. Flowers are grown for the wholesale market in the Sanford and Oviedo areas.

Farmers and crew leaders are now under many government regulations and subject to a lot of red tape and inspection by numerous agencies, she said.

Ms. Sentell said the crew leaders that she deals with are not as bad as others in some areas. "One or two rotten apples mess up the bushel, and because of them there are more laws controlling crew leaders who work with migrants," she commented. "But the crew leaders here don't try to rip off the people and charge them exorbitant prices."

Low income housing is a major problem for farmworkers. There is only one approved labor camp for seasonal farm laborers in the Sanford area and it is usually full. The Joe Jones Camp is privately owned, but not by a farmer, she said. She said there is a shortage of low-income rental property and a lot of people won't rent to migrant workers.

"Even if I have a crew which wants to come here and work, and a farmer that needs them, there is no place to house them," said Ms. Sentell. Another problem is transportation. "There is no public transportation to the farms and workers must rely on the crew leader or farmer to get them back and forth."

"We've come a long way in the past 8-9 years, but we don't have a lot of agencies in this area who help. If a migrant worker is laid off a couple of weeks and needs emergency assistance, forget it," said Ms. Sentell.

"The Sanford Christian Sharing Center helps whenever possible with emergency, food, clothing, and blankets, but there are no emergency food stamps or money for light bills available from welfare," she said. "The Salvation Army can also sometimes help."

The Migrant Health Clinic provides medical and dental care for low income families and child care is available under the 4-C program, she added. "I've seen a change over the years. You used to see kids where they weren't supposed to be or being cared for by an aunt or uncle. Now they are also able to get breakfast and lunch as well as good supervision," she said.

"Farming in Seminole used to be much larger and companies like Chase, Duda, and Nelson took care of their own, but now it's different and farmers can't afford to take care of the workers," she said.

"It's not the agricultural community it used to be and with more industry, manufacturing and housing taking its place, I don't foresee more help for these people who do this manual labor."

Most people don't realize the part the farm workers play in the area economy. "One day in the grocery store one of the managers came up to me and asked, 'When do you expect the migrants back?' He was looking for their business. Somebody has to pick the crops and do the work the rest of us won't do and these people do their buying locally. You don't find them shopping in the big malls. They buy their TVs, cars, and trucks locally where people know them and they can get credit. They spend where they live for groceries and clothes, and they pay for electricity and water."

"When they are laid off, it is no different than anywhere else such as the paint plant that burned down," she said, they face the same problems. When the hailstorm came and destroyed the crops, their bills went on."

"You don't see as many young ones getting into farm work, now," she added.

But, she said, programs such as the "excellent" one at Seminole Community College, aimed at retraining migrants to do more permanent jobs and overcome their language barriers, are offering new hope for the younger generation of farmworkers.

Top Small Businesses Sought For Honors

JACKSONVILLE — The Small Business Administration is seeking outstanding small businesses and small business advocates, to honor during National Small Business Week next May, said Douglas E. McAllister, SBA district director.

Trade associations, chambers of commerce and other types of business organizations are urged to submit nominations and sponsor candidates. Members of SBA's Advisory Council will help select the "outstanding small business person" in each state, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico. SBA's Office of Advocacy, which coordinates Small Business Week activities, will help select outstanding small business advocates.

Entrants for state outstanding small business awards will be judged on employee growth, sales increase, current and past financial reports, innovativeness of produce or service, response to adversity, community contributions and the firm's "staying power."

Parties interested in nominating an outstanding small business should contact Ivan P. Hankins, Public Information Officer of the Jacksonville District Office, Box 35067, 400 W. Bay Street, Jacksonville, FL 32202; telephone (904) 791-3132.

Nominations for state small business entrants should be submitted to SBA district offices, located in 65 cities around the country. Deadline is November 15. Details on submission requirements are available at all SBA offices.

The winners will be invited to Washington for Small Business Week activities, scheduled for May 6-12.

The "outstanding small business person of the year" will be selected from among the 52 state winners.

WIN AT BRIDGE

Bridge hand diagram showing North, South, West, and East hands with cards and suits.

unselfish, but good rubber bridge.
Then East backed in with six no-trump to try for a black suit save. South doubled. West ran to seven clubs and South bid seven diamonds. West went on to seven spades.
North really should have doubled, but North had opened with a mere 11 high-card points and was afflicted with bidder's paralysis.
It got back to South, the best player in the game. South assumed that his partner's pass showed the spade ace and decided to go for broke at seven no-trump.
West could bid no more, but East produced a double. South redoubled and since no further bids were possible, it was up to West to lead.
He knew that his partner had shown a black ace. After considerable thought, he led a club.
A queen of spades lead would have given him a 2,800-point profit instead of the 2,930-point loss for seven no-trump redoubled.
The choice of leads produces a 5,730 swing, which may well be the biggest of this year.
