We are afraid she would. Treaties apparently only so long as it is to the advantage of the nations observe them. Japan signed a treaty to guarantee territorial integrity of China, and then at the very it opportunity, seized Manchuria and is now going at more. Italy Noisted her obligations under the Lastice Nations when she invaded the conquered Ethiopia. Good many violated a treaty when she remilitarised the Ehthand. France and England repudiated their obligations, the United States when they stopped paying on their woods. And the United States broke its pledge to its or citizens to pay Liberty Bonds in gold.

We wonder just what the effect of all this treating is upon the minds of the people. Surely breaking is upon the minds of the people. Surely the Japanese know that the Tokyo government, with the sanction of the Mikado, has broken its word with regard to China. Surely the people of these other nations know that their governments have violated their pledges. If the leading governments of the world do not keep their word with respect to their solemn treaties and obligations, is there any reason to believe that the smaller nations will?

And if governments universally are not to be trusted; if they aign treaties only to break them; if the skeptics throughout the world are shown to be right in that nations make promises with no idea whatever of keeping them: then is there any reason to believe that the people them-selves will be any different? Will not they too lie, chest, and steal, in the mariner of the example set for them by their government, whenever it is to their advantage to

And if the time ever comes when a man cannot trust his neighbor any better than the Belgians can trust the Germans to abide by their latest treaty, we wonder what the basis for doing business will be; or if, for that matter, there will be any business to do.
