But one of them was quoted recently as saying that if inflation doesn't cool off, a lot of economic planners were thinking about heading for the hills. Apparently the planners still haven't learned to plan on human nature and human impulse, which can and does set awry the best laid plans of bureaucracy. There still may be one way out of the problem. That is for the administration to put into effect the spending cuts ordered by Congress. So far the tax half of the anti-inflation formula has not done the job. Meanwhile the poor citizen suffers both the federal tax increase and the tax of inflation. If the latter be the cruelest of all, the combination is cruelty compounded .-
