Truck tragedy kills girl, 8

By VICKI BOESORNER
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — The quiet of Tuesday evening near Sanford's lakefront was shattered by a loud crash and, then, the piercing call of emergency vehicles.

When Tina Sherrill Stafford of DeLand tried to negotiate the curve on U.S. Highway 17-92 from the lakefront to the French Avenue side at about 8:30 p.m., she skidded out of control and flipped the truck several times across several lanes of traffic before coming to rest.

Police said witnesses told them the vehicle was traveling well above the posted speed limit and navigation along the curve was made more difficult by the wet conditions caused by an earlier rain.

The 1992 Isuzu pickup truck landed on the property of Conklin, Porter and Holmes and both the driver and her passengers were ejected.

One child was found in a tree near the accident scene.

According to Sanford Police Sgt. Pat Smith,

Stafford, 33, was badly injured and airlifted to Orlando Regional Medical Center.

Her daughter, eight year old Samonda, was dead at the scene, Smith said.

Another child, Cory, 6, was injured but the injuries were not life-threatening, police said.

According to police reports, the youngsters were riding inside the vehicle, but were not restrained. The mother did not wear a seatbelt either, the report noted.

Sanford may gain work release facility

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Seminole County will be going to the Sanford Planning and Zoning Commission this Thursday seeking to establish a Correctional Work Release facility near the jail.

The property is on the north side of Bush Boulevard adjacent to the Juvenile Detention Facility at Five Points, and directly across from the John E. Polk Correctional Facility.

The city's P&Z commission will be considering two separate proposals. The first is a request to establish the facility. The second is consideration of the actual site plan.

The building being proposed is a 5,184 square foot, one-story structure, which would be part of the Seminole County Correctional Facility.

County races decided in runoff election

By VICKI BOESORNER
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — Few people went to the polls on Tuesday to make the decision on who would fill the county commission seats in Districts 1 and 5.

When the votes were tallied, however, incumbent Daryl McLain had retained his District 5 seat and Grant Maloy had taken Pat Warren's seat in District 1.

According to Supervisor of Elections Sandra Goard, the turnout for the hotly-contested Republican runoff race was about 13.2 percent of the registered voters in that party.

The final figures gave Maloy a 2,341 vote advantage over Warren who has been in her position for eight years. Warren got 5,028 votes (40.8 percent), while the challenger pulled in 7,367 votes (59.4 percent).

"I'm pleased with the outcome. I was a little surprised it was so large," Maloy said. "We've been working since January knocking on doors and meeting people."

Warren was less pleased with the results, but said she plans to finish her time in office and then spend more time with loved ones.

"I'm going to take the time to enjoy family and friends after a long time where I've given priority to the county," she noted. "I still plan to remain active as a citizen, however, and support qualified candidates in the future."

Maloy said he is planning to take a short break from politics before he assumes the responsibilities of office.

October is...

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

As has been brought to light, October is National Vegetarian Awareness Month and Hunger Awareness Month. It may be an excellent time to start a crash diet and lose a few pounds.

Next month, November, we'll dive head-on into the holiday season when many people will begin to put on weight from turkey and dressing, pumpkin pie, candied yams and other goodies, leading into December with all of the get-togethers for the holidays and of course those New Year's parties complete with all of those beverages and snacks which have a tendency to produce an even higher number on the scales.

But it may be difficult to start a diet in October if one pays attention to the other designations. October is also national... pizza month, popcorn month, pork month, seafood month, apple jack month, and dessert month. Once you are through with all of that, keep in mind it's also national Dental Hygiene Month.

October is also Family History Month, when people are to celebrate their family history and familiarize the youngsters with their past ancestors. (It's also "Communicate with your kids" month). Of course it

Mark Fuhrman to face perjury charges

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Former police Detective Mark Fuhrman, who testified at O.J. Simpson's murder trial that he never used a particular racial slur, will be charged with perjury, according to broadcast and published reports.

The state attorney general will charge Fuhrman with perjury today for allegedly lying last year on the witness stand about not using the racial epithet in the past decade, KCAL-TV reported Tuesday and the Los Angeles Times reported today.

Fuhrman is expected to appear in a downtown court as early as today to enter a plea, unidentified law enforcement sources told the station and the newspaper. A perjury conviction carries up to four years in prison.

Attorney General Dan Lungren's spokesman refused to confirm or deny the reports Tuesday night.

"It's still an open matter before our office, and as such, we can't comment on it," Steve Telliano said.

A message left with the answering service of Darryl Mounger, Fuhrman's lawyer, was not immediately returned today.

Fuhrman, who said he found a glove on Simpson's estate covered with the blood of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ron Goldman, testified in the Simpson trial that he had not used the word "nigger" in the past decade.

Four defense witnesses contradicted that testimony, including an aspiring screenwriter who played tape recordings at the trial of Fuhrman saying the word at least 41 times.

During the trial, District Attorney Gil Garcetti's office argued that Fuhrman's comments were immaterial to the question of whether Simpson was guilty or innocent.

Lungren began an investigation in November after the Los Angeles County District Attorney's office bowed out.

Simpson was acquitted a year ago of the 1994 slayings of his ex-wife and her friend. When Simpson's lawyers found out Tuesday that Fuhrman might be in Los Angeles, they tried to have him served with a subpoena ordering him to testify in the wrongful death lawsuit brought by Ms. Simpson and Goldman's families, but he could not be found.

Fuhrman, who works as an apprentice electrician in rural Idaho, was not expected to take the stand in the civil case.

Whether he testifies or not, he will likely have an impact on the civil trial. One prospective juror biased him as an "egotistical opportunistic cop who conspired to frame Simpson." Another called him a "cocky jerk."

And jurors after jurors had said he led on the witness stand and expressed racist attitudes.

Four targeted for unfair trade cases

By MARTIN CRUTCHER
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration has put Indonesia, Brazil, Australia and Argentina on notice that it plans to bring unfair trading cases against them before the World Trade Organization.

Indonesia, Brazil and Australia were cited for practices in their auto sector, that the administration contended represented unfair barriers to the ability of U.S. automakers to compete in those nations.

Argentina was cited for erecting high border taxes on imports of textiles, clothing and footwear.

All four cases were brought under an annual review known as "Super 301," which President Clinton brought back to life in 1994 by executive order as a way of intensifying pressure on countries to get rid of trade barriers deemed particularly harmful to U.S. industry.

The Australian government reacted angrily. In a joint statement, Australian Trade Minister Tim Fischer and Industry, Science and Technology Minister John Moore said, "We are very disappointed in this step by the United States." They said the U.S. complaint is "galling given the range of market access restrictions Australian exporters face in the U.S. market."

Acting U.S. Trade Representative Charlene Barabehsky said all four cases, the first the administration has brought under the Super 301 review, had been carefully selected to highlight the administration's "strategic enforcement strategy — aimed not only at challenging existing barriers but also at preventing the future adoption of similar barriers around the world."

She said that reasoning influenced the decision to include three auto-related cases because of the threat of a proliferation of the types of import barriers being erected by the three nations.

It had been expected that the United States would cite Japan this year for failing to adequately lift barriers preventing foreign companies from competing in Japan's huge insurance market.

But Barabehsky told reporters Tuesday that a 36-hour negotiating session with the Japanese that ended late the previous night had produced an interim agreement on insurance.

Barabehsky said Japan had agreed to some limited deregulation moves that will benefit foreign companies but that the United States expected much more to be done. Negotiators will resume talks, facing a new deadline of Dec. 15 to resolve the disputes.

The administration said it would bring cases against the four nations before the World Trade Organization. Under WTO rules, both countries must try to resolve their disputes during a 60 day consultation period. If that fails, a three-member WTO panel is selected to hear the case and issue a ruling.

The WTO panel has 12 months to rule. If the United States wins the case, it can impose trade sanctions against the country if it still refuses to drop the barriers.

Greg Mastel, a trade expert with the Economic Strategy Institute, a Washington-based research organization, said he was pleased to see the administration actually bringing cases under the Super 301 provisions, which were included in a 1988 trade law but lapsed after two years.

"A Super 301 case hasn't actually been instituted since the Bush administration did it in 1989," Mastel said. "Super 301 is a lot more credible if actual cases are brought against countries following the annual review."

In the four cases where it was beginning WTO cases, the administration contended:

—Indonesia's "national auto policy," which grants tax and tariff benefits based on the percentage of parts made in Indonesia, violated WTO rules by discriminating against U.S. automakers.

—Brazil's auto program unfairly penalizes American automakers who do not manufacture sufficient percentages of parts in Brazil.

—Australia provided subsidies to Australian manufacturers of leather upholstery in autos that discriminates against U.S. companies.

—Argentina maintained high duties on textiles, clothing and footwear that exceed the 35 percent tariff it is allowed under the WTO.

School defends drug policy after girl's suspension

By The Associated Press

DAYTON, Ohio — School officials defended their suspension of a 13-year-old honor student who borrowed a packet of Midol from a friend, saying the girl violated the school's drug policy.

Erica Taylor, 13, took the over-the-counter pills from a classmate at Baker Junior High School in Fairborn, Ohio, because she felt poorly — but then decided not to take them.

When she was found out, the school suspended her for 10 days and ordering her to undergo a drug evaluation or possibly face expulsion.

"The more and more I thought about it, the more ridiculous it became," Erica's father, Dan Taylor, said Tuesday.

The district's drug policy does not distinguish between legal and illegal or prescription and nonprescription drugs, said school spokeswoman Joy Paolo. Nonprescription drugs are only given to students who bring in signed permission slips from their parents.

"We're real comfortable with our policy, and it's pretty much in line with what most districts do," Paolo said. "I believe the general public wants safe, drug-free schools."

Midol, which contain acetaminophen and caffeine, are taken to relieve cramps, headaches and other symptoms related to menstrual periods.

Erica, who had perfect attendance last year and made the honor roll each of the past three years, can reduce her suspension by attending drug screening for $100 with later visits costing $90.

"I want to get back to school," she said. "I don't want to fail eighth grade."

AT&T launching wireless service

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — AT&T today unveiled a mobile phone service that eventually will cover much of the country, has a pager in the handset, is supposed to cost less to use and has batteries designed to last longer.

The communication giant's Seattle-based wireless unit is hoping to convince customers it can meet the demand for go-anywhere phones that accomplish several data feats.

AT&T said the service will soon be expanded to regions covering more than 80 percent of the country's population.

Dubbed AT&T Digital PCS, the service offers sleek phones with batteries designed to last 80 hours rather than the typical 12. Callers can dial from anywhere for a flat fee of 60 cents a minute, AT&T said. Currently, calls can cost up to $1 a minute.

Service packages would start at $24.99 a month, which is lower than many cellular services. The all-in-one service would negate the need for a separate pager.

The mobile telephones use digital technology that is touted as more secure than conventional cellular service. Aside from telephone calls and paging, the service allows users to receive messages sent by personal computer or text dispatch services, AT&T said.

Lay down arms, start cooperating

It's over. Yesterday's primary runoff results have made the final decisions regarding who will be running the Seminole County government for the next four years.

Now that the battles are over, we hope the many strong supporters of the various candidates will be willing to lay down their arms, and agree that the battle is over — at least for the time being.

In this runoff, as well as the first primary, the sad note is the low number of people who put the winners into office. Look at the percentage of voter turnout. For the first primary in early September, only 20.18 percent of the total eligible voters went to the polls.

This time, in the Republican runoff, the turnout was only 13.27 percent. True, there were only two races on the ballot, and only persons registered as Republicans could vote for their choice, but the low percentage makes us wonder about voter apathy.

Just think, in the average city block, only one family apparently voted. Was it you or was it the couple at the other end of the block?

What happened to the rest of the registered voters? Don't they care who serves on our County Commission? We hope this is not the case. Our commissioners make decisions which involve everyone of us. They approve spending money which comes from our tax dollars. They authorize the development of projects which may have an immediate effect on our homes, neighborhoods, or our employment.

Looking at the point of view from the winning candidates, how do they feel knowing that only a small handful of citizens supported them and what they stand for.

Our nation is supposed to be (and you've heard this all your life), a government of, by and for the people. Yet many people appear willing to let others make their selection regarding leadership. In this case, everyone depended on someone else to make the choice. Everyone thought the others would make the right choices.

We commend those who took the time and made the effort to go to the polls yesterday. They made their selections, and now everyone will have to go along with their choices.

Even though many didn't vote, it's time now for a gathering of total and unified public support. Those elected may or may not have been your favorites, but like them or not, they need the backing of the entire population and they should have nothing less.

Just a few thoughts

We have come a long way, only to find ourselves no better than those we used to put in prisons. We have legalized gambling and we will promote more, all in the name of better schools and government. We will find causes to use to continue the corruption even more. We have turned our heads to all that is part of a civilized society. We attend church and other places of worship only to pretend to have the values that are taught us. We present ourselves to others as having all these values in the name of God in order to be elected to a political office, only to degrade our society more. We allow our children to be bombarded by murder, rape, and all other possible barbarism on the nightly news, television, movies, newspaper and it goes on and on, and then we expect that they are not going to be affected? We expect that out of this culture we have created, and continue to create, that we are not going to pay a price. We believe we are not going to reap what we sow. We believe that this can be handled by a child, and that child will not be affected. We believe that we will not be affected as adults. We believe that our society will endure. We believe that we can continue to do all these things in a Nation that states, "Under God" and all will be right. How stupid and foolish can we be! These are not just Christian values! They are the values of all faiths, of all decent people! When will we have the fortitude to say we are on the wrong path?

When will we realize that we cannot continue on this path? When will we say this is wrong and regardless of the consequences we have to change? When will we stop promoting those things that we once pronounced illegal? Most of all, "will we ever recover?"

I think not!

She made a difference for others

BOSTON—Someone at the memorial service Monday referred to her as a homespun philanthropist, though I doubt she would have liked that description.

Her wit was too sharp to fit the mellow image of "homespun." As for philanthropist? She once said, "That's such a pretentious word."

"Elizabeth Noyce was as unpretentious as her adopted state of Maine. She could walk down Commercial Street in Portland, or sit down for lunch in Bremen, without ever being identified as a 200 million-dollar woman.

Yet by her death at 65, she had become a legend.

People searching for a label to describe her work called her a one-woman "economic development corporation." Looking for a term that fit her brand of charity and capitalism, they called her a "catalytic philanthropist," and an "economic philanthropist." Hopefully, those don't sound as pretentious.

The 2,000 Mainers at the memorial—bakers and senators, family and strangers—included a retired truck driver. He said that he'd come because he'd meant to write Noyce a letter thanking her for all she'd done. Now it was too late.

By her death at 65, she had become a legend.

Well, I'd meant to write to Betty Noyce too. And to write about her. From my own Maine island, I'd followed reports of her work as she carefully added $50 million to the Maine mix, rather like yeast in an economic batter.

She was too private for all but the rarest interviews. She refused the television profiles that were proffered. She didn't leave her name on any edifices. But if I may say so, belatedly, she left a legacy in how she made a "living."

Betty Noyce was from "away" as they say in Maine. She lived in Silicon Valley for over 20 years with her husband Robert, the founder of Intel Corp. When their marriage ended in 1976, she left with four children and $40 million.

MORTON KONDRACKE

Dole can't top Bush's 38 percent

Unless his campaign catches fire soon, Bob Dole could end up winning no more of the popular vote than George Bush did in 1992 — 38 percent — while Bill Clinton goes into a second term as a majority president, well ahead of his 43 percent showing four years ago.

Current polls indicate just such an outcome — Gallup shows Clinton with 51 percent, Dole with 38 percent, and Ross Perot with 5 percent. Even more significant is that Dole has broken above the 40 percent mark only once in the past year, just after the GOP convention.

According to Democratic pollster Peter Hart, the bottom line for Dole is currently the same as Bush's, but its makeup is different.

Internal breakdowns in the NBC/Wall Street Journal poll that Hart runs along with Republican Bob Teeter show that Dole is gaining more than Clinton as 1992 Perot voters decide not to support the Texan again, but that at the same time Dole is failing to hold the base 1992 Bush vote.

Among those who say they supported Perot in 1992, according to Hart, only 26 percent say they will do so again, while 42 percent intend to vote for Dole and 23 percent for Clinton.

However, says Hart, only 77 percent of 1992 Bush voters say they will vote for Dole, while 14 percent say they will support Clinton, 2 percent will go to Perot, and 7 percent are undecided.

The problem of securing the Republican base vote may explain Dole's shift to hard-line attacks on Clinton's alleged liberalism instead of trying to occupy the political center, as he did at the Republican convention.

Clinton political advisers think that Dole has gone through several phases in a (so far) vain attempt to gain traction against the president.

"They first tried a 1980 strategy, based on tax cuts and reducing government," said one adviser. "Then they shifted to a Nixon 1968 strategy, hitting hard on crime and drugs. The last couple of weeks, they've been re-running the 1994 Republican congressional strategy, accusing us of being tax-and-spend liberals."

Lately, there are signs that Dole plans to return to the 1980 theme of tax cuts and reduced government, although the White House also is expecting Dole to level sharper attacks on Clinton's character.

Conceivably, such tactics could boost Dole's support among Republicans, but it seems unlikely to attract independent ticket-splitters who tend to favor candidates who deal in problem-solving rather than name-calling.

Exit polls in 1992 showed that independents went 38 percent for Clinton, 32 percent for Bush, and 30 percent for Perot. This year, according to Republican Linda DiVall's American Viewpoint poll, Clinton is getting 50 percent of the ticket-splitter vote, while Dole is getting 26 percent, and Perot 13 percent, with 11 percent undecided.

Among self-identified moderates, Clinton is receiving 59 percent support in DiVall's poll this year, compared with 48 percent in 1992. Dole gets 24 percent, compared with Bush's 31 percent, and Perot is down to 8 percent from 21 percent in 1992.

DiVall's poll also reveals that Dole is showing up badly among women, young people, and voters in the Northeast, compared with Bush.

In 1992, male voters split 41 percent for Clinton, 38 percent for Bush, and 21 percent for Perot. This year, DiVall shows 44 percent for Clinton, 38 percent for Dole, 11 percent for Perot, and 8 percent undecided.

But among women, Clinton now is receiving 54 percent, compared with 46 percent in 1992. Dole gets 30 percent — a whopping 24 points behind Clinton — compared with 37 percent for Bush.

Among those in the 18-29 age group, Clinton is scoring 59 percent now, compared with 44 percent in 1992, while Dole gets 23 percent, compared with Bush's 34 percent.

If there is hope for Dole to better the Bush total — though it won't allow him to catch Clinton — it seems to lie in winning over undecideds, who make up about 6 percent of voters now.

According to former Democratic Party executive director Mark Siegel, undecideds usually split 2-to-1 against the incumbent, so this could help Dole get up to 42 percent, assuming few undecideds go to Perot.

So, unless something significant changes, Dole will find it difficult to get much more than the GOP base vote of 40 percent. Even Barry Goldwater got 38 percent in the 1964 landslide.

The election could resemble 1980 in reverse, when Ronald Reagan beat Jimmy Carter 51 percent 41 percent, with 7 percent for John Anderson. In some respects, Dole more resembles Walter Mondale in 1984, who got just the Democratic base vote of 40 percent. Reagan got 59 percent that year.

The bottom line for Dole is currently the same as Bush's, but its makeup is different.

Dreier's sights set on Senate?

WASHINGTON — In the final weeks of the fall campaign, the money chase is running on all cylinders, even if it sometimes misfires. Consider what happened last week.

The House of Representatives was feverishly wrapping up the nation's business last Thursday evening when Rep. David Dreier, R-Calif., stole some time for an old-fashioned fund-raiser in a trendy Washington watering hole.

It may also have been the opening shot of the 1998 campaign.

Though Dreier's staff is mum, Democrats widely believe that Dreier wants to be California's next senator in 1998, when Democrat Barbara Boxer is up for re-election. What else would explain why a lawmaker who reported more than $2.5 million in the bank as of June 30 would be canvassing for dollars just a month before the 1998 election?

Dreier is one of the lucky few this election season. His Southern California district is one of the safest in the state, if not the country. His closest election battle since coming to Washington 16 years ago was in 1992, when he eked out a 21-point victory over his Democratic opponent.

This year he's up against David Levering, 69, a retired college history professor who's making his first attempt at political office. He says he's running despite having "a lovely wife, a great set of golf clubs and a great set of books."

As of June 30, his campaign's net worth was listed as $1,585.89, though Levering estimates he's spent about $16,000-$20,000 on his quixotic bid.

Meanwhile, the $500 a plate fete was billed as "the first ever Washington fund-raising reception" in Dreier's honor. The guest list included a who's who of Washington power brokers, including Ron Kaufman, former White House political director, and Craig Fuller, who was chief of staff to President George Bush. The names of more than 100 insiders graced the invitation as part of the official "host committee."

Sharon Hodgdon, who coordinated the event for Dreier, called it an "enormously successful event for a legislator who's enormously popular, successful and thoughtful."

But at least one member of the host committee wasn't too thoughtful when sharing his mailing lists with the Dreier campaign. One invitation ended up in the files of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, which raises money for Democratic House candidates.

The invitation was inadvertently sent to a "control" name on the official Democratic mailing list. Like most political fund-raising groups, the DCCC salts its mailing lists with a few bogus names and addresses. It's a way for them to monitor who has access to their list, which is copyrighted and is considered proprietary information.

When the list is given out to a Democratic candidate, for example, both the candidate and the DCCC must report it for tax purposes. But sometimes it ends up in the hands of an overzealous lobbyist or consultant, who uses the names on the list for their own purposes.

With a voting record that closely parallels that of House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., Dreier probably didn't get much support from the Democrats who were solicited. Yet a DCCC official we spoke to was only slightly amused by the mix-up.

"Every now and then we find an error, but usually it's an honest mistake," this official said.

Democrats widely believe that Dreier wants to be California's next senator.

may also be a good time to look at the family and determine if there has been a history of being overweight, which could have led to all kinds of problems and illnesses. Perhaps it's time to consider this as a carry-over problem which needs to be resolved for one's own well-being.

We could go on and on regarding October designations. It's Polish-American Heritage Month, Spinal Health Month, Sudden Infant Death Syndrome Awareness Month, Liver Awareness Month, Kitchen and Bath Month, Clock Month, Family Sexuality Education Month, and Healthy Lung Month. All of these are important, and especially in connection with the various health problems, they should be of serious concern on the part of everyone.

But what we see when looking at the list is one of the longest lists of dedications for food anywhere in the calendar. Can we ignore it when people say, "Here, have another helping of... (whatever). After all, it's the holiday season."

Can we successfully say no and do so in a manner so as not to offend anyone? If we can't, then we can just blame it on another designation, October is Sarcastic Response Month.

Altamonte Springs in 1983. McDougall was sentenced to 34 years in prison for the torture and murder of the girl, who was the daughter of a girlfriend of McDougall.

He came back into the limelight however in April of this year, when incentive gain-time allocated to prisoners would have enabled him to be released after serving only 12 years.

At that time, through the actions of State Attorney Norm Wolfinger and at the urging of a petition signed by over 6,000 residents, the Florida Department of Corrections changed the requirements saying they no longer would allow certain inmates considered dangerous or having committed violent crimes, from early release through gain-time.

At that time, Wolfinger said he would be happy if McDougall served 85 years or more.

Computer-literate teachers to train

By DEB MUMFORD
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON — Thousands of computer-literate teachers have signed up to help their colleagues master Web sites, modems and e-mail on computers that will be as common as chalkboards in many 21st century schools.

Classrooms across America are being wired for the Internet. That has left teachers scrambling to learn computer lingo and ways they can integrate technology into daily lessons.

To help, a coalition of educational organizations, teachers unions and technology companies today launched a grassroots initiative to recruit 100,000 computer-literate teachers to voluntarily train five of their teaching colleagues.

So far, 4,000 teachers have signed up.

They are registering by electronic mail and the 21st Century Teachers Internet homepage — <http://www.21ct.org>. The site on the World Wide Web — the graphics oriented part of the Internet — contains a list of resources for educators and will connect them with other teachers involved in promoting and using educational technology.

"As kids come in and have more knowledge about computers, teachers are realizing that the chalk and eraser won't get it for you anymore," said Debb Mumford, a seventh grade computer teacher at Skinner Middle School in Denver.

But not all teachers welcome computers in their classrooms.

"There's a few of the old timers who say I'm going to do my grades on the calculator — add them all up like I always do," Mumford said. "Some of them still think it (the computer) is a toy. Some of them are clitics. The land is currently zoned for agriculture and is part of the county jail property.

Seminole County Undersheriff Steve Harriett said the facility will be used to house inmates who are employed during the day, but are required to be in custody at night.

"These will all be minimum risk inmates," he said, "who we don't believe would pose any risk to society during their work day."

He explained that each morning, special busses pick up the inmates and take them to their places of employment at various locations, then bring them back after the work day.

"We have an agreement with a number of employers around the county," Harriett said, "where if these people perform their jobs well and have no further problems, once they are released, they will be able to continue at these same jobs."

The proposed Correctional Work Release facility was originally planned to have 100 beds, but Harriett said the expected number now is down to 40 because of a lack of funding with which to build a larger facility.

"Another point," Harriett said, "is that these inmates don't ride free. They will pay a certain amount from their salaries back to the county for room and board at this facility."

"The main goal of this new facility," Harriett continued, "is to help persons find a job and become better citizens in the community once they are released from serving their time. We are helping them transcend prison life and go back into the community as law-abiding and employed citizens."

At the P&Z meeting tomorrow evening, Sanford's Director of Planning and Development Jay Marder is recommending the requests be approved, based on the similarity of correctional facility use in the immediate area.

If approved, there was no immediate word regarding when construction of the facility might begin.

Warren expressed disappointment in her opponent's "last minute negative campaigning," but said she would support him and the other commissioners in their work.

"I just hope he cares as much about the people of Seminole County as I have always cared," she said.

Breasting his belief in fiscal responsibility, Maloy said he will honor his commitment to the Contract With the County.

"I will still follow through with these ideas," he said. "I feel very strongly on the term limit proposal."

The campaign line to Maloy's home, 678-IDEA, will be kept open so people can easily reach the newly-elected commissioner.

Commissioner McLain earned 6,872 votes (55.8 percent). Lovestrand got 5,447 votes (44.2 percent).

Neither McLain nor Lovestrand was available for comment this morning.

Middle East summit continues

By BARRY SCHWAB
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — After all-night talks, Israeli and Palestinian negotiators met at mid-morning with Secretary of State Warren Christopher in search of a formula to renew Mideast peace talks.

Reporting on the discussions so far, presidential spokesman Mike McCurry said, "We are neither encouraged nor discouraged. We are determined to help the parties."

In the explosive West Bank town of Hebron today, Palestinians threw stones at Israeli soldiers. The future of the tense town is the main sticking point in the summit discussions.

Throughout the night and early morning hours today, the negotiating teams met separately and with each other. Then, Palestinian official Nabil Shaath and Israeli Foreign Minister David Levy met today at the State Department with Christopher in his office.

Dennis Ross, the chief U.S. mediator for the Mideast, met with all sides through the night. Christopher called Arafat for his assessment of the talks, and then summoned Israeli and Palestinian negotiators to the State Department for talks in his seven-floor office.

"This meeting is designed to try to figure out exactly where we are," a senior administration official said. "There are serious issues that remain. These have been very tough, very intensive talks overnight."

On Tuesday, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat broke bread and broke the ice during a three-hour White House luncheon talk between.

President Clinton, who opened the White House talks, got a briefing on the overnight developments. Arafat and Netanyahu were due at the White House before noon today for further talks, and then a wrapup statement later in the day.

While declining to comment directly on their talks, McCurry said, "Obviously, substantively they are fully engaged." But as for the substance of the discussions, he said, "I won't characterize it one way or the other. It's hard work."

"The mood is positive," said a source close to Netanyahu who spoke on condition of anonymity.

But Egyptian Foreign Minister Amr Moussa said today after a 45-minute meeting with Arafat that the Palestinian leader's mood was "very serious." Asked whether Arafat was pleased with last night's talk, Moussa said, "Not exactly."

As the unscripted Washington summit entered a second day there was no accord on the divisive issues that boiled over into bloody riots last week on the West Bank and in Gaza and took 76 Israeli, Palestinian and Egyptian lives.

Netanyahu did not reverse his decision to open a second entrance to a tunnel that takes tourists to the Temple Mount, and its Muslim and Jewish holy sites, nor did he set a date for Israeli troops to pull back from Arab neighborhoods in Hebron under a 1993 Israeli-Palestinian agreement.

Natan Sharansky, an Israeli cabinet officer, said Israel had rejected as impossible an American request for a specific date for the troop pullback.

"We say to commit oneself to a date is to create a built-in possibility of the talks breaking down," the former Soviet dissident said.

Further, Sharansky said Israel would not reverse Netanyahu's opening of the new tunnel entrance, which triggered the most intense rioting and violence since 1993.

Mahmoud Abbas, Arafat's deputy, said in an interview that the gap between the Israelis and Palestinians remained wide, despite the talks, but he said the Arafat-Netanyahu meeting was not "negative."

"It was not all 'no, no, no.' At the same time it wasn't all 'yes, yes, yes,'" he said.

Exposed to nerve gas

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon has tripled to at least 15,000 the number of U.S. troops it says may have been exposed to nerve gas during the destruction of some Iraqi chemical weapons — and that number may grow far, far higher.

Pentagon spokesman Kenneth Bacon said Tuesday that a sophisticated CIA computer model could reveal "a very large number" of soldiers may have been exposed. He did not rule out the number going as high as 100,000.

Currently, Pentagon officials are contacting about 5,000 troops whom they believe may have been exposed during the first of two explosions at an Iraqi chemical weapons dump in southern Iraq in March 1991.

About face for ROTC

BOSTON — High school students nationwide have done an about-face when it comes to the ROTC.

Programs once considered unhip and unwanted are drawing more and more students seeking discipline, camaraderie and snappy uniforms. Since 1992, enrollment at high school ROTC programs — known as Junior ROTC — has grown from 200,000 to more than 300,000.

In the seaside town of Gloucester, for example, a surprising one in seven high school students signed up when the ROTC program was restored last month after a 10-year absence.

"I didn't think today's youth would want the regimentation of ROTC, and I was wrong," said Tom Witham, principal of Gloucester High School. "I'll tell you, I've never been called 'sir' so much in my life as I have in the last four weeks."

A lot more of Ross Perot

DALLAS — His strategy of high-profile debates and a blitz of television advertising now in shambles, Ross Perot is preparing to shed his campaign cocoon and emerge as a more traditional candidate.

"We can now go full bore. You're going to see a lot more of Ross Perot," his running mate Pat Choate said Tuesday after a judge rejected Perot's bid to be included in this month's presidential debates.

Perot and presidential candidate John Hagelin of the Natural Law Party were granted an expedited appeal to try and resolve the issue before the first Sunday face-off between President Clinton and Republican Bob Dole.

Spitting in umpire's face

BALTIMORE — While baseball umpires backed away from a playoff boycott, they may still refuse to get behind the plate if a decision on the Roberto Alomar spitting case isn't made this week.

Umpires agreed to call the first playoff games Tuesday when American League President Gene Budig said he would hold a hearing Thursday on Alomar, the Baltimore Orioles' star second baseman who is appealing a five-day suspension for spitting in an umpire's face.

"We just wanted a swift and fair hearing and we're going to get that," said Drew Coble, who worked home plate at the Orioles' game against the Cleveland Indians.

"We just didn't want this swept under the rug before next season."

Amy Fisher the 'gorgeous gerbil'

BUFFALO, N.Y. — A state prison guard admitted he broke regulations by contacting Amy Fisher outside work and writing her a letter in which he called her his "gorgeous gerbil." But he denied they were romantically involved.

"I have never had sex with Amy Fisher," Sgt. Robert Schwartz, 49, told U.S. District Judge Richard Arcara.

Fisher, the 23-year-old dubbed "the Long Island Lolita" by tabloids, is suing for a transfer from the Albion Correctional Facility. She says she was repeatedly raped, abused and sexually harassed by guards. She and her mother, Roseann, also want $20 million in damages from each of 21 state officials named as defendants.

State prison officials deny the allegations and say Fisher just wants to be in a federal prison closer to her Long Island home.

PSAT adds section

By BOB WECHMANN
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON — The days of boys outcoring girls on the Preliminary Scholastic Assessment Test could be numbered if a new section testing writing skills does its job.

The new multiple-choice section is intended to address allegations of gender bias in the venerable PSAT, which determines semifinalists for the National Merit Scholarship Program.

"Millions of dollars more in scholarships should go to the young women who earned them through their superior academic performance," said Pamela Zappardino, executive director for the National Center for Fair and Open Testing, a Cambridge, Mass., nonprofit organization that works to promote fair and accurate assessments.

Her organization, known as FairTest, and others complained in 1994 that the test — taken annually by 1.8 million high schoolers — discriminates against girls.

"Every year since we have been monitoring it, girls make up a higher percentage of test takers, but a disproportionately smaller number of semifinalists were girls. Girls are being screened out at the semifinalist level," Zappardino said.

On Tuesday, the Education Department announced that an agreement had been reached among the department, FairTest and the Educational Testing Service, which administers the test for the College Board.

Umpires finally show up

BALTIMORE — The regular umpires finally showed up, and so did the most prolific home-run hitting team in major league history.

The Baltimore Orioles celebrated their first playoff appearance in 13 years by hitting four home runs, including a grand slam by Bobby Bonilla, and beat the Cleveland Indians 10-4.

Umpires from both leagues threatened to boycott the playoffs unless Baltimore second baseman Roberto Alomar was immediately suspended for spitting in the face of umpire John Hirschbeck on Friday night.

Umpires agreed to work only through Thursday, the day AL president Gene Budig agreed to hear Alomar's appeal.

Brady Anderson started Baltimore's onslaught with a leadoff homer. B.J. Surhoff hit two solo shots for the Orioles, who built a 4-1 lead in the first three innings against the defending AL champions. After Cleveland got within a run, Bonilla capped a five-run sixth with his first playoff homer in 14 games.

Game 2 of the best-of-5 series is today.

Rangers 6, Yankees 2

NEW YORK — Juan Gonzalez hit a three-run homer and Dean Palmer had a two-run shot in the fourth inning as the Texas Rangers, playing their first postseason game, beat the New York Yankees 6-2 in an AL playoff opener.

The AL West champion Rangers will try to take a 2-0 lead tonight in the best-of-5 series.

Grant: Magic can still contend for NBA title

By JEFF BERLINER
Lake Mary LifeSports Editor

ORLANDO — Horace Grant has been in this situation before.

NBA powerhouse. Trying to recover from the loss of a superstar. Brought down to the rest of the pack.

Last time it happened, Michael Jordan left the Chicago Bulls to chase baseball dreams. The Bulls were left with Scottie Pippen, Grant and very few believers that they could four-peat the NBA title.

Chicago won 55 games and finished one game from the championship series, suffering a gut-wrenching seventh-game loss to the hated New York Knicks in the Eastern Conference Finals.

Flash forward, three years later. Shaquille O'Neill has run off to Hollywood. Instead of a Pippen, there is a Penny. And Grant doesn't think the Magic is quite dead yet.

Grant and the rest of the Magic met reporters on their Media Day yesterday and most of the afternoon was spent discussing Life After Shaq. While Kazaam has taken his free throw skills to Los Angeles, Grant passed up free agency to stay in Orlando where he's not ready to write off the season. A much more muscular Grant — five pounds over last season's playing weight, seemingly all in his biceps — Grant discussed the new era of Magic basketball.

"I'm looking forward to it," Grant said. "I still believe we can contend for a championship. We have to make adjustments but we have the addition of Felton Spencer and Gerald Wilkins."

Remember, this will be the second straight season the Magic have started off without Shaq. Last season the big man was injured for the first 22 games and Orlando won 17 of them as Penny Hardaway took control and played with an aggressiveness he had to abandon when Shaq came back and the team went back to its dump-it-inside offense.

"We have to use those 22 games as a base," Grant said. "It will be different to go through a season without him and we can't get confident just because we won 17 games without Shaq last year."

Coach Brian Hill also remembers the 1995-96 start. "I'll be happy if we start 17-5 again," Hill said. "The key was our defense and the way we all came together."

This season, the Magic starts training camp knowing they won't have the big man after 22 games. As a result, Grant knows he'll be putting in, he expects, 10-12 minutes a game in the middle, splitting time with Spencer and whoever the Magic bring in during camp (Rony Seikaly? Oliver Miller?). Grant made the inevitable comparison to the post-Jordan year in Chicago.

"It reminds me of the year Michael retired," he said. "We still won 55 games without him and nobody gave us a shot then."

For the record, Grant said he hasn't spoken to Shaq since the Laker signing. No hard feelings? "We're still going to be friends," he said. "When I see him, I'll say something to him."

Is heart disorder cause for concern?

DEAR DR. GOTT: About two years ago, at the age of 44, I was diagnosed with Wolff-Parkinson-White syndrome. What is it and why don't I have any symptoms?

strategies that attempt to make hair coloring more socially acceptable — and, therefore, more profitable for cosmetic manufacturers.

Women can use Just For Men, just as men can use Clairol or any other brand of hair coloring — and, for all I know, in the next decade we may see a further change to either-gender hair coloring. The products won't change much, but the packaging and advertising surely will.

DEAR READER: WPW is a relatively common heart disorder, sometimes called "anomalous atrioventricular excitation," marked by an abnormal bundle of nerves that transmits electrical impulses too quickly from one region of the heart to another: specifically, from the atria (low-pressure chambers) to the ventricles (high-pressure chambers).

The condition, which is diagnosed by cardiogram, is often associated with a variety of heart-rhythm disturbances, such as atrial fibrillation.

In general, WPW can be treated with drugs — such as procaine amide — to slow electrical conduction. However, if patients develop persistent tachycardia (rapid pulse), electrical cardioversion may be necessary to slow the pulse. In addition, more aggressive measures — such as catheter ablation (burning out the abnormal nerve bundle) — may have to be considered.

If you don't have any symptoms, such as rapid pulses, you can probably ignore your WPW. However, when and if symptoms appear, you will be a candidate for the treatments that I mentioned.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Last year my doctor removed a mole from my leg. Biopsy revealed it was cancerous. This year he removed another cancerous lesion. I'm now taking 50 radiation treatments, and he has indicated the cancer could spread to any part of my body, yet it might not, either. He can't be sure. What's your opinion on this?

DEAR READER: Some forms of skin cancer, such as melanoma, are highly malignant, spread rapidly and recur frequently. Unfortunately, it's often impossible to predict whether a cancer has metastasized (spread) by simply examining the original lesion.

I have a patient with a skin cancer the size of a dinner plate on her thigh. It was diagnosed 10 years ago and, despite the pleadings of a cadre of physicians, she refused to have it removed. But so far, it hasn't metastasized.

I have another patient who had a melanoma the size of a pinhead. It was completely removed but, six months later, there was evidence of metastasis to the lymph nodes.

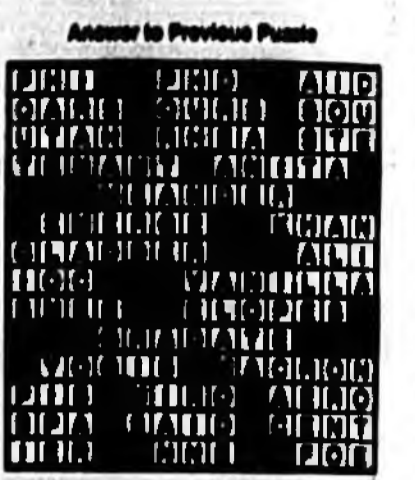

In the first case, I would have bet that the cancer would have spread within a year; in the second, I would have been tempted to call a cure. I'd have been wrong on both counts.

Your doctor, by prescribing radiation treatments, has taken a conservative approach that is completely appropriate. With ANY cancer, one must assume the possibility of metastasis and address that contingency.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Do you know why Just For Men hair color is just for guys? With so many women beginning to lose gray hair, could we use it too, or is it dangerous for the female sex?

DEAR READER: Hair coloring in hair coloring. The gender difference is a reflection of modern advertising

The final board

By Phillip Alder

Yesterday, we left the final of the Spingold Knockout Teams with Nick Nickell, Richard Freeman, Jeff Meckstroth, Eric Rodwell, Bobby Wolff and Bob Hamman trying to win for an unprecedented fourth year in a row. (No other team has won three consecutive times.) After 63 of 64 boards, they were six international matchpoints ahead of Richard Schwartz, Alan Sontag, Paul Soloway, Bobby Goldman, Steve Robinson and Ron Smith.

In the penultimate board, Schwartz gained four points to cut the lead to two. This was the final deal.

North's opening one-club bid was strong and artificial, in principle promising at least 16 high-card points. (Rodwell added one point for his good five-card suit.) South's response showed a balanced 8-10 points. West's double announced his diamond strength. Against three no-trump, West led the diamond jack, overtaken by East's queen. Forlornly, expecting to finish one or two down, Meckstroth won with the king and led a club. Much to his surprise, the diamonds were 7-1 and West didn't have the club-ace. So, the contract rolled home.

In the other room, West, Wolff, opened three diamonds. North, Sontag, doubled for takeout. South, Schwartz, might have bid three no-trump, but he settled for three hearts. This didn't play well, finishing two down. That gave Nickell's team 11 points and an historic win by 12.

However, suppose diamonds had been 6-2 and hearts 4-3. Then three no-trump would have gone two down and three hearts only one down. The match would have been a tie and extra boards required.
