Teachers debate pay for performance

By Bill Kerns
Staff Writer

Principal: 'Accountability definitely needs to trickle down to the teachers'

SANFORD — Teachers are facing increasing pressure for their students to perform well on tests. Delegates with the National Education Association are meeting this week in Chicago to discuss support for linking teacher pay to student performance. Traditionally, the association has resisted linking pay to performance. Proponents of linking pay to performance, including Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, argue that it would provide incentives for teachers. Starting in 2002, five percent of teacher pay beyond base salary will be based upon student performance as measured under the state's A+ education plan. Opponents say basing teacher pay on student performance would discourage teachers from working at schools with traditionally low performance scores.

Paul Sanchez, executive director of the Seminole Education Association, which represents teachers in Seminole County, said the union has two concerns. The local union wants student performance to be measured objectively, and all teachers should have access to bonuses based on student performance. The Florida Comprehensive Assessment Test (FCAT), established by the A+ education plan, tests student achievement in writing, reading and math. "Every teacher should have access to additional compensation," Sanchez said. "We don't want social studies, band and physical education teachers to be left out." Gay Staats, principal of English Estates Elementary in Casselberry, saw the grade of her school in the state's accountability report improve from a D to an A this

Midnight swim puts Romance in jeopardy

By Russ White
Staff Writer

SANFORD — Robert Lee Russell's Fourth of July evening swim — make that a second swim — in the channel of the St. Johns River was neither patriotic nor romantic. It landed him in jail. Russell, a 43-year-old Apopka man, is said to have ignored a sheriff's office deputy who warned him to get out of the water around 10 p.m. because there were numerous boats moving about in the dark of night.

When the deputy again spotted Russell — two hours later — he reluctantly arrested him. Deputy Kevin Wilkinson, working overtime on a Sheriff's Office range and water unit, wrote in his report that he also had to stop the Rivership Romance before it drove over Russell just after the Romance began its 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. Fourth of July cruise.

The passengers received more than a fireworks display when deputies stopped the boat while they pulled Russell from the water. "The deputies did not arrest the man at that time," said Sheriff's Office spokesman Steve Olson. "They warned him of how dangerous it was to be in the river with so many boats there for the Fourth. The man, who had only one arm, seemed to heed the warning." Olson said deputies spotted the man back in the water near midnight.

"It was a 'this guy again' situation," Olson said. "At first everyone thought there was a man overboard — an emergency. There were personal water units and sheriff's boats out all night." Russell was taken to John E. Polk Correctional Facility shortly after midnight.

Steve Olson
Seminole County
Sheriff's Office
Spokesman

Wilkinson said that through the defendant's "culpable negligence, he exposed the crew and passengers of the River Ship Romance to personal injury if it would have attempted to avoid Russell and struck the I-4 Bridge or other boats." He made the arrest and turned Russell over to Sgt. Chris Loomis. Bond was set for $158,000 (Crimes Against Person-Culpable Negligence Exposure to Harm). Mr. Russell, contacted at his home Wednesday, was unwilling to talk about his Fourth of July adventure. "We regret he (Russell) didn't heed the first warning," Olson said.

Society plans to gift to the future

Charlie Carlson, Karen Jacobs and Megan Gorby display the time capsule the Seminole County Historical Society plans to bury. The capsule has a number of items already, including an IRS 1040 tax booklet, a county tourist brochure, and a copy of "When Celery was King." The Society also plans to sell "FutureGrams." For a $1 donation, the public can fill out a telegram like message and send it to someone in the future. The funds will help pay for a stone marker for the capsule.

Banana runner-up wants grapes next year

By Russ White
Staff Writer

SANFORD — A number of people are asking how many bananas did the guy in the Herald's front page picture eat on the Fourth of July. The answer is five in two minutes. John Hobbie, 37, says he hopes to do better next year provided the contest is for grapes instead of bananas. "Grapes," he said, "are smaller. I can get more of them into my mouth." Living in Sanford for seven years, Hobbie is game for whatever competition available in the Fourth celebration at Fort Mellon Park. He said he has pigged out on watermelon and ice cream in previous contests. "I thought I'd win in bananas," Hobbie said Wednesday morning, showing no signs of discomfort after his second-place finish. "A little guy, I mean skinny, beat me by

Cemetery house to be refurbished

By Bill Kerns

SANFORD — The red brick office building at Evergreen Cemetery will receive much-needed repairs this summer. Repairs to the 75-year-old building will include replacing the roof shingles and rotted deck, pressure-washing the brick structure, sealing and painting block work, and treating the building for termites. Work at the cemetery, located at 1975 W. 25th Street near All Souls Cemetery, is expected to begin Aug. 23, and to be complete Sept. 14. The Sanford City Commission last week awarded a $20,000 bid to C.F. Touhey Construction Co., Inc., of Altamonte Springs, for repairs to the building. Further repairs to the cemetery are also being considered. During budget hearings begin-

A driver dumps a load of fill-dirt at the pilings for the extension of the GreeneWay. Road crews will need to construct a bridge over U.S. Highway 17-92, and the pilings and dirt will be used for that purpose.

The peculiar perils of Ping-Pong

The Cleveland Indians have been told they can no longer play Ping-Pong in the clubhouse.

What I'm going to tell you may be shocking. I hope it will explain why manager Charlie Manuel made such a ruling.

Ping-Pong is dangerous. The former catcher, Clint "Scrap Iron"

Courtney had a fatal heart attack while playing table tennis (Ping-Pong, if you will) against his son.

The poor guy must have been stung with a thousand major-league foul tips, none of which were fatal. He was in a hundred fights, none of which were fatal.

"Scrap Iron's" undoing was Ping-Pong.

Johnny Bench — heaven help us why catchers are so infatuated with Ping-Pong — stunned his wife when he brought home a pal on his wedding night so they could paddle a few Ping-Pong balls. The marriage didn't last much longer than the initial volley.

Manuel wasn't going to wait for any such disaster in the Indians clubhouse.

Understand, table tennis is far more draining than baseball. That's why you see very few guys as big as Mark McGwire playing tournament Ping-Pong. McGwire would collapse after five minutes of brisk tournament competition.

Jockeys, however, are good table tennis players. I've seen them just horsing around in their clubhouses. They saw part of the legs off the table tennis table so they can see who's on the other side of the net. The last time I saw jockeys playing Ping-Pong was at Saratoga. They were in their long-johns — or in their case, short-johns.

Angel Cordero told me that playing Ping-Pong was good exercise for a rider. Cordero also played basketball with the other jockeys. They played on an eight-foot basket outside the clubhouse. Angel wanted to shoot H-OR-S-E one day with his pony.

A group of hockey players tried to play table tennis but kept stepping on the balls with their skates. One of the goalies — from Moose Jaw — kept guarding the net instead of trying to hit winners. He complained, too, that a hockey mask hindered his Ping-Pong vision. Gordie Howe swiped a teammate's false teeth and substituted a Ping-Pong ball.

Basketball players don't play Ping-Pong. It's too hard to stoop to pick up the balls under the table. Wilt Chamberlain played tennis but not table tennis with the jockey Willie Shoemaker. Shoe would have skunked the Wilt at Ping-Pong, and Wilt knew it.

A football player named Tim Rossovich tried to play table tennis with one of those Oriental champions. Rossovich became so irate that he ate the Ping-Pong ball, the net and the two paddles. The big brute didn't know his ping from his pony.

There is Ping-Pong competition in the senior Olympics such as the Golden Age Games here in Sanford. The players are unusually spry. I believe the Ping-Pong ball itself is livelier than normal balls. Some guy in his nineties beat me, 21-6, 21-6. He complimented me for my consistency.

The Cleveland Indians were 10 1/2 games out of first place when their manager said no more Ping-Pong. What a back-handed way to get back in the pennant race.

Stephenson receives achievement award

The board of directors for the Seminole Bar Association (SCHA) recently presented the 2000 Lifetime Achievement Award to Circuit Judge Gene R. Stephenson.

The prestigious award is given annually to a member of the SCHA whose service and contributions over the years have greatly benefited the Bar and community, according to a press release.

Judge Stephenson's outstanding contributions have brought many changes and innovations to the Juvenile Justice System," the release stated.

When first coming to the bench in 1995, Stephenson handled all delinquency and dependency cases before a second judge was added.

During his tenure on the juvenile bench, Stephenson implemented programs such as PLOI (Problems in the Lives of Teens) and "Children Making Choices," which was created as a preventative program involving field trips for local fifth graders to tour the juvenile facility, the adult jail and sit in on an actual court hearing.

Stephenson served on the executive board of the Juvenile Justice Council, which was largely responsible for bringing the Juvenile Assessment Center to Seminole County. He also served on the advisory board of Eckerd Academy, a commitment program which serves many sentenced juveniles.

His work with the Seminole County School Board, Department of Juvenile Justice and local area police chiefs in drafting and implementing an interagency agreement allows all agencies to work together to keep each other advised regarding a child's arrest and subsequent disposition. In addition, he worked with state legislators to bring about needed changes regarding delinquency cases.

Further, Judge Stephenson recognized how little most people knew about the juvenile system and edited a booklet entitled "A Guide to Families In Delinquency Proceedings," in an effort to make the system less frightening to those families who found themselves drawn into it," the press release stated. "Realizing the cultural differences, Judge Stephenson had the booklet translated into Spanish as well."

Presently, Stephenson serves as administrative judge of the Probate and Guardianship Division. He is currently spearheading the development of Drug Court for Seminole County under the U.S. Justice Department Taskforce, which he believes will enhance community safety by delivering the most current, cost-effective and efficient service to clients and citizens. With a professional team concept, the Drug Court system will allow clients to continue with a more normal lifestyle during treatment and rehabilitation.

Consistent with such a high level of service and commitment to Seminole County, Judge Stephenson continually receives high ratings in the annual judicial polls.

Briggs earns Eagle ranking

From Staff Reports

Today, there are many distractions for teenagers, such as MTV, school, and jobs.

However, one Lake Mary teenager managed to stay focused and reached the highest rank of scouting: Eagle Scout. Beam S. Briggs of Lake Mary has been in scouting for 12 years.

Though it started out fun, there were times when it seem impossible to juggle school, work and scouts, not to mention girls," Briggs said.

While staying active in the Lake Mary High School band, working part time and going to school, Briggs found time to attend scouts, Briggs said. Scouting not only teaches people about camping and backpacking, it also teaches determination, perseverance, organization and leadership skills.

To earn the rank of Eagle, Briggs worked with Kathy Calkin, manager of the Lake Mary Parks and Recreation Department. They put together a plan of action to beautify Mt. Wesley Park. With the help from family, friends and the community more than 200 hours later, the park's beautification was almost complete.

The project included many jobs, but the hardest, according to Briggs, was the planning, preparation and manual labor of constructing concrete steps.

Briggs' objective was to have the residence of Lake Mary enjoy the park. On several occasions, he has driven by and has seen parents and children in the park playing.

From the project, Briggs said he has learned the importance of planning and thinking things through. He said that this Eagle project taught him so much that will stay with him for a lifetime.

Panama Francis performs at dedication

Black history was shared at the re-dedication of the Wells' Hotel on June 19.

The hotel was built in 1926 by William Monroe Wells, the first licensed African American Physician to practice medicine in Orlando.

This restored venue will be the repository for African American history.

The re-dedication featured food with an African flavor as well as entertainment from the club Savoy and the Apollo Theater in New York City. David Albert Francis, "Panama Francis," Orlando resident and former jazz drummer for musical legends such as Lucky Millinder, Sy Oliver, Willie Bryant, Cab Calloway and Teddy Wilson, performed at the event.

Carl Raphael Purdy, a graphic artist and president of Raphael's Realm Art Gallery in Sanford, watched

"Panama" autograph a portrait of himself and pledged that he would hang the original Panama likeness next to autographed portraits of

John Birks "Dizzy" Gillespie and the late Jesse Stone, composer of rock songs such as "Money Honey" and "Shake, Rattle and Roll."

Job Fair set for this Saturday

Grove Counseling Center is conducting the Sanford Job Fair 2000 Saturday, July 8 from noon until 4 p.m. More than 20 full-time positions must be filled by Sept. 18. Among positions available are program director, two primary counselors, two case managers, 12 behavior management technicians, three behavior management tech supervisors, two secretaries and two cooks.

The event will be held at Sanford Boys and Girls Club on Persimmon Avenue. For additional information contact the Grove Counseling Center at 407-339-9600 or fax resumes to 407-339-2129.

Altamonte Springs Fire Department to offer CPR course beginning July 10

Considering the number of near drownings of infants and children in Central Florida over the past week, the Altamonte Springs Fire Department will offer a CPR (Cardio-Pulmonary Resuscitation) course on July 10 and 11. The course will start at 6 p.m. both evenings, and will last for approximately three hours.

Paramedics and firefighters will teach each student home safety practices, basic first aid and CPR for infants, children and adults.

The course is open to all, with a charge of $30, which will include a CPR lifesaving book, key chain barrier device protector, wallet CPR instruction first aid guide and an American Heart Association Health Care Provider Certificate.

For reservations or additional information contact the Altamonte Springs Fire Department at 407-830-3844.

Village grows tired of raising neighbors' misbehaving child

DEAR ABBY: I can relate to "Had It in Houston" regarding their neighbor's unruly, undisciplined child.

Tom, our neighbor's 6-year-old boy, has not only inappropriately fouled our children on the school bus, but was caught touching the exposed genitals of a younger neighborhood boy on two occasions. He roams the neighborhood, uses foul language, openly hits his older sister—and his parents appear totally clueless. For two years they've allowed Tom's behavior to get worse. The mother is rarely home, and she pawns Tom and his siblings off on our neighbors and us.

We are on the verge of notifying Children's Protective Services, but we don't want to start a "hate thy neighbor" relationship. They are already a bit "chilly" toward us because their son's behavior has forced us to send him home a few times. His parents have said nothing directly to us, but they criticize us to the other neighbors, who are well aware of the problem.

We've considered moving, but why should we go through the expense of leaving a nice area because of this family's ignorance and irresponsibility? Abby, what should we do?

FRUSTRATED IN FOREST PARK

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Call Child Protective Services immediately. Don't put it off any longer. Talk to your other neighbors about your plan. There is strength in numbers. The boy needs psychological counseling, and the parents need parenting classes. All adults have a responsibility to save a child who is in trouble. Read on.

DEAR ABBY: In response to the inquiry posed by "Concerned in Pennsylvania," regarding adults who survived child abuse and how they managed. My siblings and I were verbally, emotionally and occasionally physically abused by both of our parents and a step-parent. I would like to share a bit of our story.

One of the most critical coping techniques for us was the love and stability provided by other family members, especially our grandparents, who offered us shelter, unconditional love, and bottomless encouragement and support. We were also very fortunate to have teachers, counselors and coaches who believed in us and lifted us up in ways that we can never thank them enough for. Finally, we had a deep-rooted, but sometimes hidden, faith in God, each other and ourselves. In other words, what some might call a "survival instinct."

In short, our survival and our thriving can be attributed to the willingness and kindness of adults who cared enough to help us in ways large and small. To those persons, we can never fully convey our thanks in words, but we can in deeds—by becoming normal, productive and kind adults who contribute positively to society.

Teachers

year. While the school had a D, Staats said teachers did shy away from accepting job offers.

"Because of the state's A+ Plan, teachers are looking more carefully at the schools they interview with and the positions being offered to them," Staats said. "As a category D school, we did face that in interviews with candidates."

The accountability report on schools was established two years ago as part of the A+ education plan.

Staats said she does not believe teacher pay should be based upon student performance.

"Quite honestly, I think it's a variable that's hard to nail down fairly," Staats said. "On any given day, there are so many different factors with the students and the school."

However, principal Jim Shupe of Charles Middle School in Oviedo, which opens in August, said teacher pay should be based upon student performance.

"Administrators are held accountable for student achievement and teachers are not," Shupe said. "That's not equitable. The accountability definitely needs to trickle down to the teachers, because that's where the rubber hits the road."

Federal and state legislators are looking into ways of giving incentives to teachers at low-performing schools. Shupe said that because much of the state's accountability report is based upon student improvement, teachers at low-performing schools may have an advantage over teachers at schools with an A.

"To me, the pressure is on the A schools," Shupe said.

Barry Liebowitz, principal at Pine Crest Elementary in Sanford, said he would only favor bonuses based on so-called "value added" testing, in which student performance is measured at the beginning and ending of the school year.

"They should not just focus on one assessment," Liebowitz said. "There should be multiple assessments throughout the year, similar to making a portfolio."

He is concerned about plans by the state Department of Education to track student growth from year to year and hold teachers accountable.

"As educators, we know that a child in one year is not necessarily the same child the next year," Liebowitz said.

Meanwhile, Suzanne Crook, principal at Woodlands Elementary School in Longwood, said teachers should be measured based upon measured improvement within their classes based on "value-added" testing, and not compared to other teachers at different schools.

Crook and Liebowitz represent schools dealing with different challenges. Pine Crest, which made a C on the state's accountability report this year, has a high rate of student mobility. By comparison, Woodlands, which made an A on the report, has a lower student mobility rate and fewer students receiving free or reduced lunches.

"When we do value-added assessment, we're not comparing teachers at different schools or even at the same school," Crook said. "If schools do a good job of heterogeneously grouping classrooms, so one teacher isn't stuck with mostly low-performing students, then it can be fair."

Crook said she can understand how teachers would be concerned about moves to base pay upon student performance.

"If I was still a teacher I would have a little bit of fear of this," Crook said. "But I'd also look at it as a challenge."

Meanwhile, according to a report released Tuesday by the American Federation of Teachers, teachers get paid less than other professionals.

In the 1998-99 school year, the average teacher made $40,574, according to the federation's annual salary report. In Florida, teachers average $35,916, which was 11.5 percent below the national average.

By comparison, according to the report, engineers average $68,294 and computer systems analysts average $66,782.

The report fueled debate about linking teacher pay to performance.

Cemetery

Cemetery are part of an overall program to clean up and repair the city's cemeteries. The city has also repaired the gazebo at Lakeview Cemetery, located just south of All Souls Cemetery.

Earlier this year, more than 100 volunteers from the State Attorney's Office, Seminole High School, churches, business, and organizations from across Seminole and Brevard counties participated in the United Way "Make a Difference Day" at Page Jackson Cemetery.

The historically black cemetery, located south of Lakeview Cemetery, has gravestones dating to the 1840s. The city has also marked each gravestone in the cemetery as part of clean-up efforts.

"We started this about a year and a half ago with repairs to the gazebo and marking gravesites at Page Jackson Cemetery," Jeffries said. "We worked on the gazebo first, because it needed the most repairs, then we looked at the brick building."

In September 1999, the county approved spending up to $15,000 to remove an estimated 35 dead and fallen trees from Page Jackson Cemetery. Herbicide has been sprayed to control weeds.

Page Jackson Cemetery has a rich history dating to the early 1800s, and was once a thriving area primarily for African-Americans.

Many of those buried there are identified on markers as veterans of World War I and World War II or members of civic organizations. Others have been identified as African-American veterans of the Civil War.

Ownership of the cemetery remained in question until recent years. Because of the question of ownership and the lack of a protective fence, grave sites suffered from natural deterioration, vandalism, and lack of care.

Many grave sites were unmarked, although the city of Sanford is attempting to identify the sites. Many of the older grave sites have sunk several inches, and it is believed that the original wooden baskets of the 1800s have rotted away.

driving for

This year, Jeff Gordon signed a contract with DuPont for an estimated $18 million.

In the race to grab the choice NASCAR teams, corporations are driving sponsorship costs through the roof

By Rea McLeroy
Lapbylap

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — In racing circles, money buys speed. These days, those miles per hour have an escalating cost, which sponsors are fighting to pay. Corporations are entering a bidding war that is pushing the financing of a potential Winston Cup championship car to the range of $15 million to $18 million.

Teams routinely decline to announce the specific monetary value of these contracts, but most concede that $15 million a year has become the magic number for top teams. In an era of salary caps, NASCAR bucks the trend and deems its teams independent contractors. It's a free-for-all that some say is spiraling out of control and expanding the gap between the top and bottom tiers of racing.

That gap is startling. Some teams compete with primary sponsorships, those emblazoned across car hoods, of $5 million to $6 million for the 34-race season. Others get triple that amount.

Earlier this year, Jeff Gordon described his new contract with sponsor DuPont as the largest deal in auto-racing history. The estimated $18 million a year includes championship bonuses and incentive programs to keep Gordon going for the green.

Last week, Jack Roush announced what was advertised as the biggest deal in Winston Cup racing. He declined to outline the specifics of his multiyear contract to put Pfizer/Viagra on the Mark Martin car. Roush Racing President Geoff Smith said it is company policy to protect the confidential nature of the contracts, but reports have attached astounding numbers to the contract. The total value is believed to be between $60 million and $66 million over the next three to five years.

"When we had to face a decision about a change of sponsorship, I was looking around at the economic pressure that's put on our team by the other deals that have just taken place, because mine don't have the same war chest," Smith said. "I'm pleased to be able to know that we're going to be able to compete at those levels, hopefully all the way to the end of Mark's career."

Others are less pleased. Few teams can lure a jackpot sponsor, and the number of companies willing to lay out those millions is limited. The widening divide between the top 15 teams and those holding the positions of 25th on down would seem to be cause for growing concern.

"It's a free economy out here," NASCAR Senior Vice President Mike Helton said. "There's so many independent contractors between NASCAR and the promoter and the car owner, unlike an NFL or a Major League Baseball or the NBA where the owners all sit down in a room and say, 'This is as far as we're going to go with this.'"

"I think NASCAR's biggest challenge in this deal is to make it so that a guy who has a sponsor that may not be double digits in the millions can still be competitive, and that's what we have to work on," Helton said.

But can a $6 million team take on a powerhouse operation such as Mark Martin's or Jeff Gordon's?

"If we run better than those guys, shame on them," said Ryan Pemberton, Robert Pressley's crew chief. "Good for us. I can't expect to run better than those guys. I would like to, I think we can, but I don't think we should. Not with the resources that they have. ... I'll bet we're doing it on a third of what the top 12 teams are doing it on. You have to be very smart and not waste anything."

Add being a good negotiator. Luring a sponsor is tricky business. Companies must be convinced that they are getting their money's worth. Penske Motorsports General Manager John Erickson said that teams and sponsors need to do their homework and decide what they want and what they are willing to pay. Smith agrees.

"You've got a sponsor that comes in that used to think NASCAR might be too regional or too small for them," Smith said. "They're able to come in and say, 'I can make this work for me. I want the best. What does it take for me to buy it?' In that sense, the teams that are really good at the top, it's a little bit like I've got the Mona Lisa to market. There's only one, and it's pretty good, so what do you want to pay for it?"

Rea McLeroy covers NASCAR for the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

PICKING A SPOT

- Hood and rear quarter panels (above rear tire): $7-$12 million (usually part of primary sponsor's overall agreement).
- Trunk and rear bumper panels: $350,000-$1.5 million (usually part of a primary or associate sponsorship).
- Lower rear quarter panel (behind rear tire): $250,000-$1 million (usually an associate sponsor).
- Front quarter panel (in front of and in back of front tire): $370,000 (NASCAR contingency award sponsors)

NASCAR NOTES

Dale Earnhardt usually doesn't spend much time with the media, but when Sports Illustrated showed up in Daytona, he made time to expound on NASCAR's restrictor-plate rules: "We're the only sport that ties the hands of competitors. I'm just saying we need to grow up. Right now, we're not racing."

Michael Waltrip's car owner, Jim Smith, has decided to change his Chevrolets over to Fords, and he's been talking with Ford officials about support. Smith runs a Ford on NASCAR's Truck tour. Smith expects Waltrip to be in a Ford by October's Talladega race.

Johnny Benson again was the Cinderella at Daytona, only again, midnight came too soon. Benson, a Pontiac underdog who nearly upset the Ford hordes at Daytona in February, almost did it again. He was leading late, but he simply didn't have enough to pull off the upset.

GM drivers, crew chiefs talk about Ford's edge at Daytona

The disgust on Jimmy Makar's face wasn't easy to hide, even in the late-night shadows in the Winston Cup garage.

"Restrictor-plate racing. It stinks."

Not a great night for crew chief Makar and his driver, Bobby Labonte. But they came out of the Pepsi 400 with a 12th-place finish, and they're still the Winston Cup points leaders, even if they don't have good feelings about restrictor-plate racing at Daytona and Talladega.

Plate racing is getting meaner and uglier, though NASCAR's toughest escaped 'the big one,' twice in fact, both times just barely. And Terry Labonte may have a king-size headache after getting knocked out when hitting the wall hard on the front stretch.

"All I saw all night long was people beating on each other, trying to pull each other out of position," Pontiac's Makar fumed. "It's gotten to be more of a who-can-screw-whom type race now. Like Dale Earnhardt said, it's not how good a car you've got that wins the race, but who you can block and knock out of the way."

"That's the way it was for us. We'd get a couple of positions and look like we might be all right, but then some of these idiots would beat on you, lean on you, get you out of shape, and you'd lose your momentum and go backwards. You can't race like that."

"Fords have an advantage at Daytona and Talladega all year long, it's just nobody wants to talk about it."

— Crew Chief Jimmy Makar

"Looks like when we come back here next February, we'll just all have to beat on each other and be very, very aggressive with our driving style. That seems to be what everybody is right now, super-aggressive drivers. You don't give anything, and you take whatever you can get."

"The first four, five or six cars would play it smart, stay in line and drive off from everybody, but back in the pack it was a mess."

Labonte was succinct: "It was a typical restrictor-plate race — you can't race." It was clearly a Ford night. Ford men swept the top five spots, just like here in February. Ford probably would have swept Talladega, too, except Jeremy Mayfield made his move too early and Jeff Gordon took advantage. If Ford's Mark Martin had won Talladega, and he had the best car there, NASCAR would probably have given Chevy teams that new Daytona nose piece they've been asking for, since Ford's Daytona-Talladega edge has been obvious.

Now the question is, "What might NASCAR do for the Talladega restrictor-plate finale in October?" If nothing, put your money down now on another Ford win, probably with Dale Jarrett.

"It wasn't a race. It was just a chess match," Chevy's Earnhardt said after getting shuffled out at the end.

"It's a [expletive deleted] joke," Richard Childress, his car owner, added. "We carried a knife to a gunfight. This Monte Carlo just carries so much drag that you're going to get shuffled. The bottom line is we've got to get rid of the drag. We're running with a 15th-place car. Dale and Mike Skinner both did a heckava job to finish where they did."

"If NASCAR can't see this, I think the fans will say something about it."

"Fords have had an advantage at Daytona and Talladega all year long, it's just nobody wants to talk about it," Makar said.

In part, that's because Chevy and Pontiac men are sitting pretty at most of the other tracks, where downforce is a decided plus, not the drag issue downforce is here.

Earnhardt's bid really vanished when Tony Stewart, the only other GM man in the hunt late, and Labonte's teammate, got shuffled out in a Rusty Wallace-Martin double-team.

"I did everything I knew how to do in a race car," Stewart said of his own remarkable charge down the stretch.

Larry McReynolds, Mike Skinner's crew chief, agreed with Stewart about the Fords: "Looked like the Chevrolets got their butts kicked. When you see Dale Earnhardt struggle like he did, that's a pretty good message."

Mike Mulhern has covered NASCAR for 26 years for the Winston-Salem Journal.

Making a statement for lacrosse

Hogan, Quinn display talent to nation

Dean Smith
 SPORTS EDITOR

ALTAMONTE SPRINGS - It's been quite a month for the past and present stars for the Lake Brantley High School boy's lacrosse team.

Danny Hogan who graduated from Lake Brantley in 1999 as the all-time leading scorer in Seminole Athletic Conference history recently had his number 11 Jersey retired by the Patriots, the first lacrosse athlete to have his number retired by a Seminole County high school at a special ceremony held in Tom Story Field.

The son of Kevin and Janet Hogan, Danny capped off a great career by scoring 69 goals and handing out 51 assists in addition to playing in the state all-star game as a senior.

Hogan, who just finished his freshman year at the University of Florida, has already been selected with the great honor of being the Captain of the Gators in just his sophomore season.

The star of coach Dave Shrum's 2000 team, Shawn Quinn, also picked up a huge honor when he was selected to play in the prestigious Senior All-Star Game at Troy, New York.

And Quinn made the most of his appearance according to his father Bob, tallying a goal and an assist and six good blocks in about two quarters of play as the South All-Stars rallied from a 7-1 deficit in the middle of the second quarter to defeat the West All-Stars 13-12 before 4,000 fans.

Quinn got added playing time as two big guns from Maryland, the hot-bed of lacrosse, did not show and the Lake Brantley product did his school and our state proud playing with teammates who will be going to lacrosse powers including Loyola and Duke.

In the other game, the East All-Stars beat the North All-Stars 13-12 before 4,000 fans.

The past month has been very exciting for a pair of Lake Brantley High School lacrosse stars as Shawn Quinn (No. 5, lower left photo) had a goal and an assist in helping the South beat the West, 13-12, in the Senior All-Stars Game at Troy, New York, and former Patriot Danny Hogan (No. 11, lower right as a Patriot), who just finished his
