House Readies Tax Cut But Ford Threatens Veto

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House is preparing to pass Americans may see their taxes increase on Jan. 1 unless the lawmakers can override a presidential veto. The House was expected to pass the six-month tax cut extension today, sending it to the Senate for swift approval. But President Ford is ready to reject it because it lacks a ceiting on federal spending for the 1977 fiscal year. "The issue now is whether taxpayers get a big tax increase in January," House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Al Ullman, D-Ore., said Tuesday. A quick veto could return the bill to Congress in time for an override attempt before the year-end recess, expected

Paris Conference Proves Successful

bouiliet was like a meeting of allied leaders during a war. The six heads of state needed to reaffirm their unity and commitment to a common cause even if their generals and admirals might be bickering over the fine points of strategy and

The declaration of Rambouillet comes across as a welcome expression of agreement on principles for the leading industrial nations to follow in waging what amounts to a two-front war - getting themselves out of a recession without creating more inflation. Yet it does not solve all the trade and monetary problems that strain an economic alliance, nor does it assure that each nation's economic policies will be subservient to the interests of the others.

President Ford apparently defused one potentially divisive issue - the suggestion that the United States should resort to more economic stimulation to quicken the pace of recovery and thus help the market for European amd Japanese exports. Mr. Ford gave an optimistic summary of the expected growth of the U.S. economy in the coming year, and dismissed the idea that it was worth a surrender to inflationary policies to achieve more growth than is already in the cards.

A spirit of realistic compromise seemed to permeate the declaration. The leaders conceded their countries had to be their primary goal, but they recognized the pitfall of precipitating trade wars with tariff manipulations for the sake of achieving it. A new mecnanism to limit the fluctuation of currency exchange rates without retreating to fixed rates, as France had proposed. also is in the cards, and the seeds were planted for cooperation on energy development programs.

Perhaps the most hopeful sign flowing from Rambouillet was the structure of the conference itself. That the six leaders would attack these economic issues on a head-to-head basis, at times even excluding their own finance and foreign ministers from the room, is a measure of the importance they are placing on achieving a unified

The interdependence of the industrialized nations of the Free World has been largely a topic of diplomatic rhetoric until now. Leaders of six nations whose economies are closely intertwined have now gone a step further toward embodying that principle into agreement on economic policy. That they could co so in spite of different strengths and weaknesses in their own economies and their different political and social systems is a tribute to the high order of statesmanship that prevailed at

Agency Superfluous

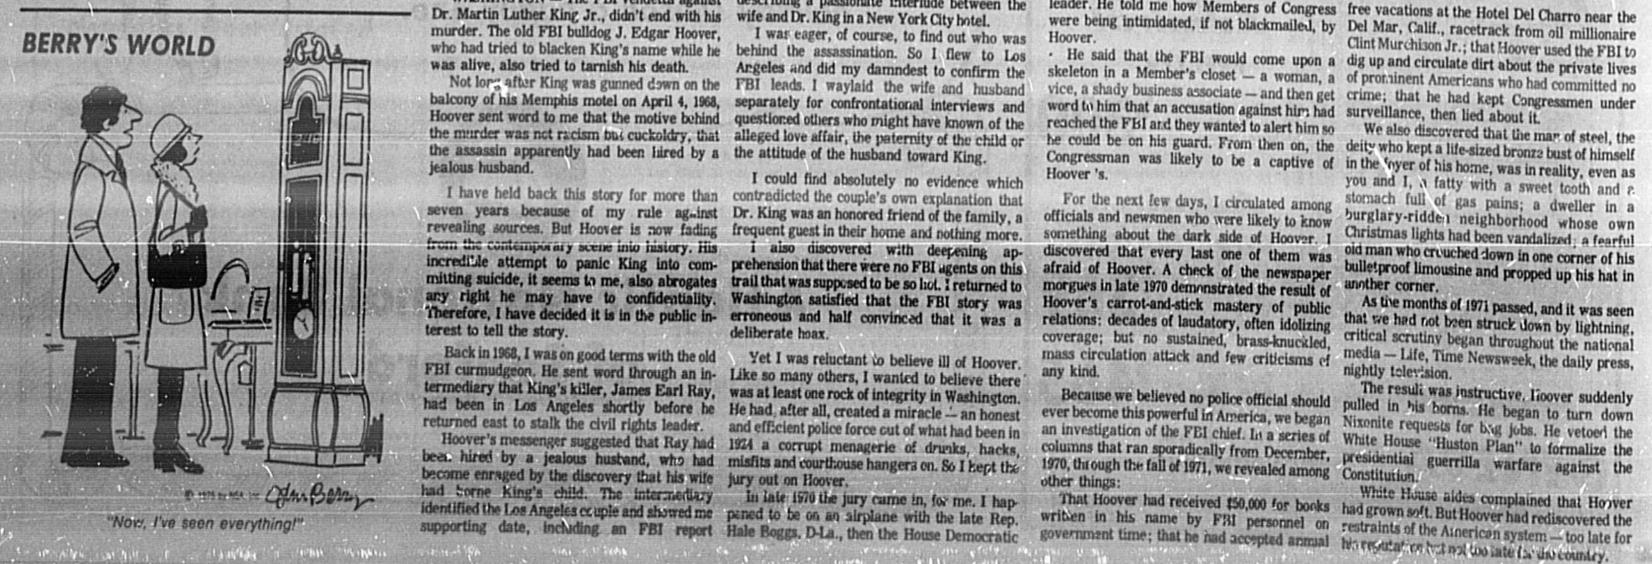

When Congress recently passed a "Child Nutrition Act" that was really an overambitious expansion of the school lunch subsidy program, we noted how bills with a questionable purpose can get through Congress mainly on the strength of an appealing title. So it appears that the "Consumer Protection Act" squeaked through the House in spite of a widespread conviction that it would create a superfluous addition to the federal bureaucracy.

Who wants to vote against consumer protection? Our respect goes to the 199 House members who did so, even if 208 of their colleagues went along with creating a new consumer agency with duties that duplicate those already assigned to other federal agencies.

President Ford has indicated he would veto the bill, which has also passed the Senate, and he can do so without being "against" consumer protection. He is very much for it, and has made the deregulation of business and industry to promote competition on the consumer's behalf a cornerstone of his

That alone is unusual since his doctor told him three years ago he would never participate in athletics again. But Skinner is 35, eight years older than his coach and possibly the oldest college player in the country. He carries 19 credits, does a bit of farming and may wrangle a spot on Weber's rodeo team. In three years his oldest son will be in college. He suffered two crushed discs in his lower back three years ago when he slipped and fell on ice en route to work at nearby Hill Air Force Base. The injury left his left leg immobile for several months.
