Advisory committee to meet

SANFORD — The Seminole High School Local School Advisory Committee (LSAC) will meet Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the school's media center. Seminole High School is located at 2701 Ridgewood Ave., Sanford.

Seminole's LSAC serves as the primary communications mechanism between parents and the school. All parents and any other adults interested in the students of Seminole High School are invited to attend this and all other LSAC meetings.

On the agenda for Tuesday night's meeting is the school's involvement in community-based after-school programs. Plans will also be completed for the Misa SHS contest, which will take place in January.

Australian found guilty

SANFORD — Graham Dobson, 33, of Australia, is guilty of the attempted murder of Seminole Sheriff's Deputy Thomas Johnson on March 30.

That was the finding of a jury in Sanford Friday after two hours of deliberation. Dobson was also found guilty of armed robbery. He and a Colorado man were accused of robbing a Sun Bank in rural Longwood. Johnson foiled their getaway in a shootout. Although Dobson fired no shots, the other robbery suspect wounded Johnson and shot and killed himself.

Dobson's three-day trial was before Circuit Judge C. Vernon Mize Jr. He faces a possible sentence of life in prison.

I-4 'bomb' a hoax

SANFORD — Seminole County Sheriff's Bomb Squad Lt. Marty LaBrusciano said today the reported "bomb" that caused a four-hour traffic tie-up on Interstate 4 Saturday morning contained no explosives.

The interstate was closed and traffic rerouted from State Road 436 while explosives technicians removed a device from a car parked near the highway. Altamonte Springs police had received a telephone warning that a package found near the car contained a bomb. The package was recovered and examined, but contained no explosives, LaBrusciano said.

Polk may be home Thanksgiving

ALAMONTE SPRINGS — Sheriff John Polk, who has been hospitalized in Altamonte Springs since Nov. 7 with a heart condition, hopes to spend Thanksgiving Day at home in Sanford, Dr. Benjamin Newman said today.

Polk, 58, was expected to possibly be released from the hospital over the weekend, but Newman said, "He never asked about getting out." Newman said Polk is comfortable at the hospital, and received many visitors over the weekend.

It was one year ago that Polk underwent his second heart bypass surgery in North Carolina, and his health has declined since. Newman said Polk was hospitalized last Thanksgiving for that surgery, so he hopes to be home by Thursday.

Sanford ordinance keeps the peace, police report

From staff and wire reports

Florida now has a statewide law covering what many Seminole County municipalities have already enacted into city ordinances, aimed at reducing those booming sounds from automobile speakers.

Across the state, effective immediately, you don't have to be moving, you need not necessarily be on a public street and a police officer need only hear your thumping bass to hand you a citation under Florida's boom car law.

In Sanford, the ordinance has been on the books for many months and has apparently made its mark on helping keep peace and quiet in the city.

"We've handed out numerous citations on this," said Police Chief Steven Harriet. He explained that the Sanford ordinance pertains only to motor vehicles. "This is actually the same as a traffic violation," he said, "and the people who receive them will either have to go before the county judge or pay a fine."

Lake Mary and Longwood had also enacted similar ordinances earlier this year.

Longwood's ordinance, passed June 18, took the problem one step further and included loud sounds from any amplifiers, radios or sound producing machines no matter where they were.

The wording of the Longwood ordinance called it "excessive and unnatural, prolonged and unusual sounds."

Florida's new law was clarified by regulations approved unanimously last week by Gov. Bob Martinez and the Cabinet.

The statewide law took effect Oct. 1 and is intended to quiet down those supercharged stereo systems some people install in their cars. The law provides for fines of $35.

Critics said the law was too vague. So the Department of Highway Safety and Motor Vehicles crafted the regulations which agency chief Leonard Mellon said should clear up any questions.

"Booming stereos are not only a nuisance, they are a safety hazard," Mellon said. "Drivers who can't hear the sound of traffic for the sound of music likewise can't hear another car's horn."

Lake Mary road widening hits more obstacles

LAKE MARY — Lake Mary will not honor Seminole County's request to loosen its zoning codes for condemned property in the proposed path of the Lake Mary Boulevard widening project.

Last week Seminole County butted heads with Lake Mary during a city commission meeting in trying to obtain a special exception to the city's zoning codes for two businesses on Lake Mary Boulevard.

The county has been obtaining right-of-way along Lake Mary Boulevard in preparation for the massive widening and beautification project that will be a joint effort of the two governments. The county last night requested the city ease its building codes for two condemned structures standing in the proposed path of the widened road.

Following comments by the city and county attorneys and city staff members, city commissioners agreed to uphold its ordinances and deny the county's request.

Mayor Paul Tremel summed up the matter by saying, "This city will continue to uphold all of its ordinances. The county's request is denied."

The county has filed suit to condemn the Lake Mary Boulevard property, but the amount to be paid for the land is yet to be

Board may consider 'protective zones' to shelter sensitive parcels of county

By J. MARK HANFIELD
Herald staff writer

SANFORD — Seminole County commissioners may consider allowing developers to exchange densities from one site to another in order to preserve land.

The concept would protect sensitive areas of the county from construction but could congest already developed areas.

County planning director Tony VanDerworp told commissioners the practice might require selection of "protection zones" in areas of the county where some homes might be built but are environmentally sensitive and should be preserved.

The practice also requires selection of "receiving zones" where higher concentrations of housing can be allowed by transferring the development rights or "credits" away from protection zones, VanDerworp said. He also suggested commissioners consider authorizing county officials to buy development rights to assure protection of land without actually paying the full cost of the land.

The county's $20 million conservation land acquisition bond approved overwhelmingly by voters Nov. 8 will also play a major role in protection of county lands. Major sections of the county could be purchased during the next five years and preserved from development and nearby development.

Commissioner Pat Warren, who proposed the referendum, said the bond proceeds should also be used to acquire buildable "uplands" to allow for the replenishment of the underground drinking water aquifer.

"For example, land near the expressway that isn't developable," Warren said. "That should be purchased for recharge purposes. I had that in mind when I proposed the referendum. You can have areas for the little critters but then you need to have areas of recharge for the big critters, us, too."

The concepts were among several commissioners will be considering during the next several weeks as methods to conserve the county's natural resources. Natural resource protection is required by the state under growth management and planning guidelines.

Other areas commissioners will consider include protection of groundwater, the sole source of drinking water for central Florida. A new state requirement for SANFORD — Some of the students at the Crooms School of Choice were trouble makers at other schools. They usually weren't given the opportunities to explore their leadership potential.

At Crooms, however, they're turning their lives around.

"And we want them to be leaders and to take the responsibility," said Brenda Ford, a language arts teacher at the school.

Ford coordinated a program used last Thursday where the students and the teachers and administrators traded places for the day.

"They do this sort of thing at other schools," said Ford, "but these wouldn't be the students who would be chosen for the programs at the other schools."

Crooms School of Choice is an alternative learning center for students who had been discipline problems at their zoned schools or who are pregnant or young mothers with infants.

"These are special students," Ford said. Many of the youngsters are gifted, but have had trouble in traditional classroom settings.

Board to consider extra costs for school project

Sanford Middle project continues

By VICKI BOGEMAN

SANFORD — Sometimes you have to spend some money to save some money.

About 800 linear feet of conduit systems to the future locations of the classroom buildings at Sanford Middle School will be installed at a cost of $4,950 if the school board approves the expenditure at tomorrow night's meeting.

The work was not part of the original bid submitted by A.D. Arnold Construction, the contractor working on the renovations and reconstruction of the school, located at 1700 French Ave., Sanford. The construction at the school began in August.

The revision to the contract brings the total cost of the project to $5,690,790.

Money from the 1986 $105 million bond issue is being used to complete the project.

Scott E. Stegall, supervisor of construction for the district, said in a memo to School Superintendent Robert Hughes the systems should be put in now because all areas around the existing buildings are currently under construction and "the installation of the conduit would be much less costly at this point in time."

The present buildings in which Sanford Middle School is housed will be demolished during the summer of 1991. New classroom buildings, administrative facilities, a media center and a cafeteria are under construction on the site.

"We're building a whole new school," said principal Dan Pelham.

The buildings which will be demolished next year were built between 1927 and the 1950s.

Until 1960 the building was the home of Seminole High School, followed by a short stint as the Sanford Junior High School, before becoming Sanford Middle School in 1970.

Longwood to select panel to conduct attorney search

By NICK PPRIFAUPT
Herald staff writer

LONGWOOD — A screening committee is to be selected tonight to weigh the merits of attorneys seeking to become Longwood's new city attorney.

Since the expulsion of Richard Taylor as city attorney June 4, Frank Kruppenbacher, who had been utilized by the city as a labor attorney, was named acting city attorney and has served since that time.

Friday morning during a special meeting of the city commission, Kruppenbacher was replaced by Longwood Attorney Jerry Korman, who will serve as interim city attorney until that position can be filled on a permanent basis.

Newly-appointed Mayor Hank Hardy suggested the appointment of Korman, which passed on a 3-2 vote that saw strong opposition from commissioners Adrienne Perry and Rex Anderson.

A three-member panel has agreed to serve as the screening committee. James B. Byrne Jr., of Longwood, will be the chairman, with Dorry A. Bragg, of Orlando, and Larry L. Carpenter, of Altamonte Springs, filling the other two committee positions.

As of Oct. 31, the closing of the time period for the submission of applications for the job, attorneys representing eight separate law firms had applied. Of that number, five are headquartered in Orlando, and one each from Winter Park, Maitland and North Miami. Korman's name was not on the list of applicants.

According to the city charter pertaining to the hiring of a full time city attorney, "all candidates will be screened by a committee of members of the Florida Bar Association, appointed by the city commission.

If the three member committee is approved at tonight's meeting, they will be charged with reviewing all of the applicants and make recommendations to the commission as to the individuals from these firms who appear to be most qualified.

It will then be up to the commission to determine which of the attorneys will be considered for personal interviews prior to selecting a final candidate.

The city commission will meet tonight at 7 p.m. in the city hall chambers, 175 W. Warren Ave., Longwood.

Thatcher v. Europe

Sir Geoffrey Howe's resignation as Britain's deputy prime minister the other day reflected more than just another intramural squabble within the ruling Conservative Party. It represented the further isolation of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, and a further blow to Britain's dwindling influence within the European Community.

The departure of Howe, Thatcher's oldest political ally and the architect of her market-oriented economic policy, was triggered by the prime minister's intransigent opposition to steps toward greater European unity. At an EC summit in Rome earlier, the other 11 members ignored her objections and agreed to a timetable for setting up a European central bank and, eventually, adopting a common European currency.

Thatcher has prevailed within her Cabinet, where decisions are supposed to be made collectively, despite the fact that she is increasingly isolated in her resistance to yielding more British sovereignty to bureaucrats or central bankers on the continent. In part that's because of her iron determination, but mostly it reflects Tory fears that a public quarrel would ensure defeat at the next election, which must be held within 19 months. As if to validate that fear, a poll taken recently showed that 64 percent of those questioned said Thatcher should quit now.

Popular resentment derives both from Thatcher's cold, abrasive personality and from policies that have streamlined the economy but whose effects have hit hard at low-income Britons: cuts in social services, high unemployment, resurgent inflation and an extremely unpopular and inequitable per-head tax in place of a property tax based on market value.

Britain's membership in the EC is hardly at stake. Even Thatcher, jealous as she is of Britain's sovereign prerogatives, endorses European integration, albeit on a more confederative basis. The danger now is that Thatcher's stubbornness and Germany's increasing clout may further marginalize Britain's role in the community, and thus in Europe generally. London is still Europe's largest financial market by far, but it's not written in stone that that will always be the case.

Britain stands at a crossroads. In the past, Thatcher has protested loudly, then gone along quietly with integrationist moves, the latest being Britain's belated joining of a European exchange-rate regime. Perhaps she will compromise again; if she doesn't, Britain's voice in Europe will grow weaker at a time when outside events — in Eastern Europe, especially — are impelling Western Europe toward greater unity. As if to underline the point, recently at the very time when Howe quit Thatcher's Cabinet, British and French crews boring a tunnel under the English Channel made contact at midpoint.

Giving thanks in America

With much of the world in political turmoil and economic uncertainty, what do we have to be thankful for? As the Thanksgiving holiday approaches, what do we lose if it becomes only a time for fun and recreation and the original ideas associated with the day become lost or forgotten? Why be thankful for anything?

We can be thankful that in America, we have a degree of freedom not possessed by any other great nation on earth. That freedom is guaranteed by a Constitution which defines our rights and liberties, a judicial system which seeks to preserve them, a legislative system which tries to expand them, and an executive system which seeks to protect them from our enemies.

We can be thankful for freedom of religious choice. While some complain about increasing secularism and educational humanism, yet, we have substantial guidelines, reinforced by the courts, which protect and preserve the right of individual freedom of conscience and religious practice. We are responsible to God according to our own consciences, or even to disdain such belief, and are not enshrouded by a national state religion or communist type atheism.

We can be further thankful that in our country we can choose our own careers, and are not confined to one dictated by the government, or decreed by inheritance. Individual initiative, gumption, imagination, capabilities and dreams can still guide the direction of our vocations. We are limited only by our own aspirations.

A multitude of further reasons could amplify our notes of thanksgiving. In the midst of family reunions, televised games and parades, let's reflect for a few moments on why we have a national holiday of Thanksgiving. Then as our heritage becomes clear in our thinking, may we take time to give quiet and humble thanks to God for both personal and national blessings received.

Geothermal alternative is heating up

GEYSERVILLE, Calif. — During the late 19th and early 20th centuries, the rich and famous trekked 100 miles north from San Francisco to obtain the presumed medicinal benefits of the vapors rising from the bubbling fumaroles in the remote Mayacamas Mountains.

Although there never were any true geysers spouting columns of steam and water, the resort built to accommodate those pilgrims was named The Geysers; and the closest town, Geyserville.

William Jennings Bryan and William Howard Taft came, as did Ulysses Grant, Theodore Roosevelt, Mark Twain and members of the nation's wealthiest families. The trip was surely invigorating, but the sulphuric fumes offered little to improve their health.

As that health fad was losing its appeal in the 1920s, however, a visionary entrepreneur named B.C. McCabe realized that the superheated water and steam spouting from fissures in the earth's surface could be harnessed as geothermal power — the world's oldest and cleanest source of energy.

Expanded commercial development of The Geysers began during the 1950s and 1960s. Today, it is the world's largest and most successful geothermal energy project, with the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. operating 21 power plants on the ridges overlooking Big Sulphur Creek and on the valley floor below.

At a time when a crisis in the Middle East has again made the nation conscious of the imperative need to develop non-petroleum energy sources, geothermal technology is one of the numerous alternatives already in place here in California. Indeed, it is arguably the state where the potential of new fuels is being most aggressively explored.

The Unocal Corp., a California-based diversified energy company, is both the world's largest developer of geothermal energy and the leading producer at

Today, it is the world's largest and most successful geothermal energy project.

The Geysers, where it delivers the steam to drive three-fourths of PG&E's turbines. Other producers at The Geysers include Shell Oil and Freeport-McMoran. In the Imperial Valley, near the state's southern tip, Unocal has another geothermal project.

The technology might be able to satisfy one-quarter of California's demand for electricity if its potential were fully developed in the state.

Smaller geothermal generating stations have been built in Utah and Hawaii. District heating systems in cities such as Klamath Falls, Ore., and Boise, Idaho, utilize geothermal energy. Areas with undeveloped geothermal potential in this country include most of the West and communities bordering on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

In Italy, the use of geothermal energy dates back to the Roman Empire. Today the world's most extensive utilization of geothermal energy is in Iceland. Most of the island nation's homes and businesses rely upon it as a source of district heating.

Other nations where it already is used include: the Philippines, Indonesia, New Zealand, Japan, Mexico, the Soviet Union, China, France, Portugal and Greece.

Bush policy falling from favor as Mid-East tensions escalate

WASHINGTON — Someday they are going to give a war and nobody is going to come.

President Bush may be thinking of that ironic quip as the drums of opposition to a war in the Persian Gulf grow louder.

Bush had overwhelming support for his quick dispatch of troops to Saudi Arabia to block further aggression by Iraq's Saddam Hussein after the takeover of oil-rich Kuwait last Aug. 2.

Since then he has masterfully promoted a U.N. coalition against Iraq with the Security Council voting for 10 resolutions calling for Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait and imposing tight economic sanctions on that country.

Bush also is increasing the military pressure on Saddam by raising to some 400,000 American troops facing his forces in the Gulf.

All this is designed, according to White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater, to bring about a peaceful resolution of the crisis.

But it is fraught with danger, and the president's support for ousting Saddam by force is beginning to unravel. Some columnists and former officials are contending it would be the wrong war in the wrong place.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., ranking GOP member on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, backed up by Senate Republican leader Robert Dole, wants to call

The president's support for ousting Saddam by force is beginning to unravel.

Congress back into session and to debate the possibility of a declaration of war.

Although the United States has been in two major wars — in Korea and Vietnam — since World War II, there has not been a declaration of war under the constitutional prerogative reserved for Congress since the bombing of Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941.

Certainly Bush feels by flexing U.S. military muscle, he can get Saddam "to come to his senses" but that is not a certainty.

Critics claim that the president has not explicitly explained the objectives of Operation Desert Shield or sold them so that the American people will be convinced of the righteousness of the cause. But oftentimes no explanation is possible or acceptable.

Perhaps the president should take heed of the principles laid down by former President Ronald Reagan in his newly published memoirs "An American Life" in the aftermath of the bombing of the Marine barracks in Beirut.

Reagan wrote that sending the Marines to Beirut was the "source of my greatest regret and my greatest sorrow as president."

He said that in the months and years that followed the catastrophe in 1983, he adopted a set of principles "to guide America in the application of military force abroad, and I would recommend it to future presidents."

"The United States should not commit its forces to military action overseas unless the cause is vital to our national interest.

"If the decision is made to commit our forces to combat abroad, it must be done with the clear intent and support needed to win. It should not be a halfway or tentative commitment and there must be clearly defined and realistic objectives.

"Before we commit our troops to combat, there must be a reasonable assurance that the cause we are fighting for and the actions we take will have the support of the American people and Congress.

"Even after these other tests are met, our troops should be committed to combat abroad only as a last resort, when no other choice is available."

Murder of Polish clergy unresolved

WASHINGTON — The Polish government has arrested two of its own generals high enough into its government to get justice for the priest known as "Father Jerzy."

During a recent visit to Poland, we pressed authorities in the new democracy to revive the investigation into the murder of Father Jerzy Popieluszko. The outcry among Poles after his death forced then-communist leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski to try four low-level agents of the Polish secret police, the SB. They were convicted, but the buck stopped there. Jaruzelski was not about to shine the light further into his own SB.

On Sept. 30, we published a column urging further action, and six days later the two generals were arrested. That marked the first attempt by the new government to make the old regime accountable for what happened to Father Jerzy.

One of those arrested was the former chief of the SB section that spied on and harassed outspoken Catholic priests. We still believe the order to murder Father Jerzy and the impetus to persecute and murder other priests came from higher up. We raised the issue in Gdansk when we met with Solidarity leader Lech Walesa. He told us that "a good explanation of the facts is in everybody's interest," and he backed a more thorough investigation. Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki told us he would look more closely into the case, but he has shown reluctance to lean on the old communist leaders because they have been cooperating in the transfer of power to the new government.

That cooperation would have to be substantial to make up for the sins of the past. From our sources we have learned the specifics of a reign of terror by the SB against priests.

Auto accidents were the preferred SB method of killing the clergy. Wlaciaw Schenk, a papal chaplain, was the first Polish priest to die in a mysterious car crash after the imposition of martial law in 1981. Two other clergymen were killed in car accidents in 1984. Still another was found dead that year in a forest. Officials claimed it was a suicide, but he was tied to a tree and there was dirt in his mouth.

The SB tried several times to murder Father Jerzy before succeeding in 1984. The SB first tried to kill him by throwing a bomb into his apartment in 1982. More than once he was run off the road.

Those already convicted of his murder testified that one month before Father Jerzy's death, the SB decided to make another effort to kill him, either by a "beautiful traffic accident" or "a good beating" that would "shake him to the edge of a heart attack." Father Jerzy had a weak heart.

The SB finally got him by driving his car off the road, kidnapping him and torturing him to death.

The brutality against the Polish clergy did not stop when the two SB agents were imprisoned in 1984. The next year was a particularly bad one for priests. In April 1985, a parish priest was severely beaten. In May another was burned by attackers with cigarettes. In June another was nearly killed when his car went out of control after the front wheel rolled off. In July another priest was assaulted by men presumed to be SB agents.

Intelligence sources gave us the names of half a dozen other Polish priests who died under mysterious circumstances.

The pattern of abuse was so obvious under Jaruzelski's watch that only someone who was asleep on duty could have missed it. Yet Jaruzelski claims he had nothing to do with it.

Jaruzelski was not about to shine the light further into his own SB.

Astronauts pack for re-entry Road

By WILLIAM HANWOOD
UPI Science Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL — The Atlantis astronauts packed Sunday for a Mojave Desert landing Monday with satellite trackers debating the mysterious hide-and-seek behavior of the shuttle's Pentagon payload.

Atlantis and its five-man crew are scheduled to glide to a landing Monday on runway 15 at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., sometime between 1 p.m. PST and 5 p.m. Sources said before launch that touchdown was planned for around 3:43 p.m. PST Monday.

The weather forecast called for winds gusting to 25 knots out of the west. The shuttle cannot land if crosswinds exceed 15 knots, but with a news blackout in effect, it was not immediately possible to determine what impact, if any, the forecast might have on NASA's landing plans.

While Atlantis's military mission is being conducted under a veil of secrecy, amateur satellite watchers spotted the shuttle's cargo flying about 125 miles ahead of the spaceplane Friday evening, indicating the satellite was launched earlier that day.

The satellite appeared as a bright, reddish "star" sailing through space just ahead of the shuttle, which was as bright or brighter than brilliant Jupiter.

When Atlantis flew over Cape Canaveral, Fla., Saturday evening, the shuttle was alone. But as it entered Earth's shadow and began fading from view, it changed from brilliant white to ruby red, making it look like the satellite the night before.

"I think what they were seeing is the shuttle plus something and that something is the big question," Ted Moiczan, a respected Canadian satellite tracker, said in a telephone interview. "Was it an optical illusion? Was it something in the cargo bay like the (cradle) for the satellite?

"The other one that is kind of tantalizing ... is the possibility that they rendezvoused with what they deployed on Friday, so maybe we were seeing both objects. It's hard to square everything otherwise."

Sean Sullivan, a satellite tracker who routinely follows shuttle missions at the Kennedy Space Center, said the color of the shuttle as it faded from view indicated the astronauts may have been flying in close formation with the spacecraft.

"It was ruby red," he said. "This was not your normal shuttle pass. I can't think of any reason the shuttle would be red. If this is the end of classified missions, we might as well do it with a bang. And this one is a bang."

Atlantis and its five-man all-military crew blasted off Thursday from the Kennedy Space Center to kick off the seventh and last fully classified shuttle flight, a four-day mission conducted under a cloak of secrecy with all communications between the astronauts and mission control in Houston blacked out.

On board Atlantis are Air Force Col. Richard Covey, 44, Atlantis's commander, Navy Cmdr. Frank Culbertson, 41, the co-pilot, Marine Col. Robert Springer, 48, Air Force Lt. Col. Carl Meade, 40, and Army Maj. Charles Gemar, 35.

The astronauts presumably spent the day Sunday testing the shuttle's re-entry systems and packing up for the long glide back to Earth Monday.

Atlantis's payload has been widely reported to be either a low-altitude photo-reconnaissance satellite or an electronic signals intelligence — "sigint" — spy station capable of intercepting military communications from an orbit 22,300 miles above the equator.

But Atlantis was launched into an orbit carrying it only 28.5 degrees to either side of the equator, well south of Iraq, for example, and the Soviet Union. Why a photo-reconnaissance satellite would be launched into such an orbit is far from clear.

Compounding the mystery, sources told United Press International that Atlantis's payload was not equipped with an "inertial upper stage" booster, which is required to push heavy-weight "sigint" satellites to their high orbits.

Whatever the satellite is, Atlantis's crew began training to launch it in May 1989. Any duty the spacecraft might ultimately see over the Persian Gulf, then, would appear to be coincidental. Given the shuttle's orbital "inclination" of 28.5 degrees, it was not clear how useful a spy satellite could be in the Persian Gulf crisis.

Sullivan said the strange behavior of Atlantis's payload raised a third possibility: that the shuttle was carrying a new type of satellite altogether, or one dedicated to Strategic Defense Initiative — "Star Wars" — missile defense technology research.

An SDI payload is scheduled for launch early next year in a declassified military shuttle mission.

But Atlantis is not believed to be equipped with a mechanical arm that would allow the astronauts to retrieve a payload once it had been launched from the shuttle.

"What would cause them to go back to it? There are some nagging things that would tend to say maybe we didn't see a re-encounter, that maybe we saw something else," Moiczan said. "There are so many things about this that are strange."

Wellfield protection will require the county to adopt construction and land use restrictions near public drinking-water wells to assure they don't become contaminated by pollution.

VanDerworp said the protection does not extend to household wells.

Wellfield protection usually involves creating zones extending out from the well where certain kinds of construction or chemicals are prohibited. The wellfield protection zones have been established for several years in south Florida where the drinking water aquifer is within a few feet of the surface and more vulnerable to contamination than Seminole County's aquifer.

decided in court. In one condemnation suit, it was found that a dental office at 515 W. Lake Mary Blvd., and the adjacent building, Designer Pools of Central Florida, would end up being too close to the new highway boundaries. In fact, it was said that parts of the building fronts would actually be in the way of the eventual road widening.

The buildings have been in existence since before the city codes were adopted. When the codes were approved, the buildings were not completely in compliance, but were allowed to remain as non-conforming structures.

It is now a question of how much money the county will have to pay the property owners to have take the right-of-way land involved.

At last night's commission meeting, Assistant Seminole County Attorney Lonnie Groot requested the city to allow the owners of the buildings to move them further back on the property without having to bring them up to code.

"The county now owns the front part of this property," Groot said. "Some of the buildings are now in the right-of-way and will have to be moved."

He added that "this is an involuntary move for the property owners. It would be impractical if they can't be moved unless brought up to code standards. I think the property owners should have the right to move their buildings further back on the property and continue to operate," he concluded. Groot said if the buildings were moved and had to be brought up to code, the damages would be between $200,000 and $250,000 while merely moving them back further on the property would only cost between $120,000 and $130,000.

Lake Mary City Attorney Ned Julian countered by saying, "The city ordinance clearly says that if a building is non-conforming, it must be brought up to code."

City building official Stan Welling explained that if a building is moved or if 50 percent or more of the structure is renovated, it must be brought up to all code requirements.

Julian said the matter of how much the property owners will be paid in the condemnation suit to obtain the land, will be decided in court.

Boomcars

bicyclist's bell or a child's screams," Mellon said.

In Sanford and Longwood, the often booming sounds need only be heard for a distance of 50 feet from a motor vehicle. The state law targets sound "plainly audible" at a distance of 100 feet or more.

The regulation says that applies to any auto or portable stereo inside or outside a car "that can be clearly heard outside the vehicle by a person using his normal hearing faculties."

In other words, officers must hear the noise with their own ears, without the assistance of a microphone or even a hearing aid.

Officers must be in direct line of sight and hearing, to be able to calculate the distance and identify which vehicle is making the noise.

"The officer need not determine the particular words or phrases being produced or the name or any song or artist producing the sound," the rule says. "The detection of a rhythmic bass reverberating type sound is sufficient to constitute plainly audible sound."

The vehicle has to be on a public street, but the regulation says that includes any parking lot or driveway open to traffic.

"The motor vehicle may be stopped, standing or moving on a street or highway, including parking lots and driveways," it says.

The regulation also applies to sounds "louder than is necessary for the convenient hearing of persons inside the motor vehicle" near churches, schools or hospitals.

The regulation took effect immediately, Mellon said.

Suppressing anger may be deadly

United Press International

BOSTON — Women who do not show the anger they feel could be making a deadly mistake, a Michigan researcher says.

A survey of 372 women and 324 men found that women who habitually suppressed high levels of anger were three times more likely to die than those who did not, although the same was not true for men, Mara Julius of the University of Michigan School of Public Health said Sunday.

During an 18-year period, women in Julius' study who scored high on a scale of suppressed anger had triple the death rate of those who scored low. She told a meeting in Boston of the Gerontological Society of America.

Among men, however, anger suppression appeared to play a role in mortality rates only for those who had high blood pressure or chronic bronchial conditions, she said.

Men with systolic blood pressure of 140 and above who tended not to show their anger had twice the death rate of those with high blood pressure but low suppressed anger scores, Julius found. Men with bronchial conditions and high suppressed anger also had double the mortality risk.

The study also discovered that men with a high degree of suppressed anger but low blood pressure were four times less likely to die than those who were both angry and did not show it and had high blood pressure. Julius said that indicates anger itself does not appear to be a mortality risk for men.

Those in the study ranged in age between 30 and 69 in 1971. Julius tracked their mortality rates through 1989, adjusting for age, weight, blood pressure, the condition of their lungs and bronchial passages, education and smoking habits. During the study period, 17.3 percent of the men and 9.4 percent of women died.

To determine the levels of their anger and how they showed it, Julius asked the study participants to describe how angry they would feel if their spouses yelled at them for something they did not do or if a policeman did the same thing.

They also were asked to choose a phrase describing how vigorously they would protest.

Julius found that about 40 percent of each sex was likely to react by trying not to show anger. However, "men were more likely to report suppressing anger in the marital confrontation while women were more likely to report suppressing anger in the policeman confrontation," she said.

While it appears that expressing anger is a healthier way of coping, Julius said this "does not mean one should rant and rave at the slightest provocation."

"I believe in the reflective method of coping with anger — count to 10, or higher, and then deal directly but calmly with the issue that provoked the anger," she added.

during this special day," said Ford.

She added that there were no criteria set by the school for how each teacher could select their shadow.

The students were chosen from among the eighth graders in the disciplinary program and the 11th and 12th grade girls in the teen age pregnancy program.

All together, 28 of the school's 220 students made the switch.

Principal-for-the-day Kenneth Sheppard is an eighth grader in the disciplinary program.

He worked with Barbara Kirby, who is the principal every other day to learn about the trials and tribulations of running the school.

"The student teacher switch day was a career day in a sense," Kirby said. "The students got a chance to be a teacher, a guidance counselor, a secretary or a receptionist. They saw the work that goes into keeping this school going."

Ford said the students may very well have made career choices based on the opportunity they were given.

breakout of the roles played by each board, a meeting schedule if one has been established, and a list of current openings.

In filling out the information form, citizens have the opportunity of expressing their interest in the Board of Adjustment, Code Enforcement Board, Firefighters Pension trustees, Historical Commission, Local Planning Agency, Parks and Recreation Advisory Board, Planning and Zoning Board, and trustees for the Police Pension.

A financial disclosure form would also be required if a person is selected for any of the boards, with the exception of the parks and recreation board.

While filling out and returning the forms is not mandatory, Litton hopes to receive a sufficient number so that the form might become a part of the appointment process.

The main goals of the mail-out are to encourage citizen participation in city government functions, and to obtain as much information as possible so the city might make the best selections for the various positions.

Lake Mary residents who wish to take an active part in city government are urged to respond as quickly as possible, either by return mail or dropping off the forms at City Hall. Several new appointments will be made during the next city commission meeting, scheduled for Dec. 6.

Barbara Bush to cover up

ABOARD AIR FORCE ONE — Barbara Bush, wearing an "Operation Desert Shield" bracelet, said Sunday she has no fears about venturing near the front lines in Saudi Arabia. But she said she will do so in pants.

In apparent respect for the Saudi dress code, which requires women to cover up, the first lady revealed that her outfit for a Thanksgiving Day visit with U.S. troops will be a pair of slacks and a shirt.

"I hate for the troops to see me in pants," but that's the way it will be, she told reporters while en route with her husband from Germany to Paris on the third day of a week-long trip to Europe and the Middle East.

The first couple will celebrate Thanksgiving with some of the more than 230,000 American troops in the Persian Gulf, including many near the Saudi-Kuwaiti border where Iraqi troops are stationed.

Trudeau bumped from Saudi trip

NEW YORK — Cartoonist Garry Trudeau, the creator of "Doonesbury," was mysteriously bumped from a Thanksgiving trip to visit troops in Saudi Arabia. Newsweek magazine said Sunday.

Newsweek said Trudeau was planning to take the USO-sponsored trip with comic Jay Leno, but was dropped without explanation from the trip's manifest.

The official reason from U.S. headquarters in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, was that Trudeau was not barred, but his visit was merely postponed "due to logistics and transportation limitations," Newsweek said.

Trudeau might have ruffled some feathers, however, with strips satirizing U.S. policy in the Persian Gulf, the magazine said.

A senior administration official denied the White House knew anything of Trudeau's trip, but added, "If we had known, we would have bumped him, too." Newsweek said.

Bush: Holiday release just a 'ploy'

By GAYLE YOUNG
United Press International

President Bush, meeting with world leaders Monday during a historic treaty summit in Paris, said there was "no room for compromise" with Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and dismissed an Iraqi offer to free thousands of foreign hostages held in Iraq and occupied Kuwait beginning on Christmas Day.

Bush called the surprise Iraqi announcement Sunday a "cynical ploy," and he joined British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in demanding the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Iraq's invasion forces in Kuwait.

After holding a breakfast meeting with Bush at the U.S. Embassy, Thatcher told reporters that Saddam's "evil has to be stopped," and vowed "either he withdraws or the military option has to be used."

Bush repeated his position that there is "no room for compromise" with Saddam and added, "We're ratcheting up the pressure; I hope he understands."

Bush, in Paris to officially end the Cold War with the signing of the Conventional Forces in Europe treaty, was scheduled to hold a dinner meeting with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev to discuss the Persian Gulf crisis.

A brief dispatch Sunday by the official Iraqi News Agency in Baghdad said the announcement to release hostages beginning on Christmas Day came after Saddam met with government officials.

"It has been decided that foreign guests would be allowed to travel in batches ... from Dec.

25 and within a period of three months, the last batch of which would leave the Iraqi territories on March 25 unless something would take place that (would) mar the atmosphere of peace," INA said.

Observers said Iraq may be trying to buy more time by announcing the release of the hostages over a protracted period.

There are about 3,000 foreign nationals, most of them men, in Iraq and Kuwait who have been unable to leave for home — either because they are being held against their will at key economic and military sites or because they are in hiding from authorities.

The United States, which has led the international response to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, has about 500 Americans under Iraqi control.

'Thunder' scrubbed by bad weather

United Press International

LANDING ZONE EAGLE, Saudi Arabia — High winds and rough seas forced the partial scrubbing of a highly touted mock landing by U.S. and Saudi marines on a beach near the border with Iraqi-occupied Kuwait.

Helicopters managed to ferry 400 marines ashore as part of the six-day imminent Thunder exercise on Sunday, but military officials said the bad weather made it unsafe for hovercraft to transport troops to the beach some 100 miles from Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's occupying forces.

Officials planned to try the amphibious landing again Monday.

"There's no sense endangering people unnecessarily for a training exercise," said Chief Warrant Officer Charles Rowe, speaking to reporters who were on shore awaiting the arrival of the Landing Craft Air Cushion transport vessels.

The hovercraft are designed to carry troops and military equipment to shore while skimming over the waves at high speeds. But waves of 8 feet to 10 feet slowed the vessels and threatening to overturn them.

"In peacetime there are limitations and for safety reasons you don't want to lose anybody," said Maj. Gen. Harry Jenkins Jr., commanding officer of the 4th Marine Expeditionary Brigade.

Despite the postponement of the landing, portion of the exercise, military officials called the day a success because helicopters taking off from a five-ship task force got the other U.S. and Saudi marines ashore.

Leaders meet for closing of Cold War era

By CHARLES GOLDSMITH
United Press International

PARIS — Amid extraordinary security, leaders of 34 nations arrived in the City of Light for a European summit formally ending a four-decade era of Cold War tension.

The three-day summit, launching a new age of East-West cooperation, will be highlighted by the signing Monday morning at the Elysee Palace of a massive conventional arms treaty that removes the risk of surprise attack in Europe.

The 160-page Conventional Forces in Europe pact was initiated Sunday in Vienna, where negotiators have met since March 1989.

Europe "stands at the threshold of a new era — an era of peace, prosperity and security unparalleled in the long history of this continent," said President Bush, who had dinner Sunday night with French President Francois Mitterrand at the Elysee Palace.

Bush acknowledged that the summit starting Monday "seems to have been overshadowed by what's happening in the (Persian) Gulf but it is a significant milestone."

Iraq said Sunday it would begin on Christmas Day to release thousands of foreign hostages held in Iraq and Kuwait as human shields against any attack by U.S.-led forces.

Bush was to discuss the gulf crisis at breakfast Tuesday with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, who flew to Paris from Rome Sunday.

The three Baltic republics of the Soviet Union — Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia — were invited Sunday to take part in the summit as "guests" of France, diplomats said. The Baltic states seek independence from Moscow.

Pope plans trip to Soviet Union

By CHARLES MOLEY
United Press International

VATICAN CITY — Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev met with Pope John Paul II for the second time within a year and told reporters later they agreed the pope should visit Moscow, but no date was set.

"We will see each other on Soviet territory," Gorbachev told a reporter of the Soviet Novosti news agency after the private audience. "We agreed on this today. We will talk about the timing later."

However, the Vatican made no mention of a papal visit to the Soviet Union in a sparse eight-line statement issued after the visit.

Because it was a private audience, the pope and Gorbachev made no speeches, as they did during their first historic meeting which occurred during the Soviet leader's official state visit to the Vatican Dec. 1, 1989.

Sunday, a Vatican reporter said he heard Gorbachev say to the pope as they shook hands in a Vatican corridor after the meeting: "The next meeting will be on our ground." But Chief Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro Valls told reporters what Gorbachev said was, "Maybe we shall see each other in Moscow."

Hearings study limits to service

By WILL DUNHAM
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Just how far a member of Congress can go in assisting a constituent, particularly one who has contributed campaign money, is an issue in sharp focus during Senate hearings into the links between five senators and an indicted savings and loan kingpin.

The so-called Keating Five senators — Sens. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., John Glenn, D-Ohio, John McCain, R-Ariz., and Donald Riegle, D-Mich. — received $1.3 million in donations to re-election campaigns or pet causes from Charles Keating Jr., who now faces racketeering charges in California. The hearings before the Senate Ethics Committee, which resume Monday, are to determine whether the five applied improper pressure upon bank regulators on the behest of Keating and whether any of their actions violated Senate rules.

All five say they did nothing that reasonably can be called anything beyond constituent service — a basic and accepted part of the life of an elected legislator. Several of the senators, however, say the Keating Five case underscores the need for an overhaul of campaign finance laws, a cause that has been stifled by partisan bickering for several years.

Robert Bennett, the committee's special counsel who has spent a year probing the case, said he understood the frustrations of the five senators, along with the 95 other members of the Senate. The cost of mounting a political campaign is skyrocketing, Bennett said, at the same time constituents increasingly are seeking help in dealing with the government bureaucracy.

"How can our system of government maintain the appearance and reality of integrity as these trends continue?" Bennett asked.

"Now, none of this is an excuse for wrongdoing, if wrongdoing occurred," Bennett added. "It is, however ... a booming warning that unless these trends are recognized and dealt with, we will have more cases like this."

High court ruling spurs media fury

By WILL DUNHAM
United Press International

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court's affirmation of an order preventing Cable News Network from broadcasting its Manuel Noriega tapes drew intense criticism from press representatives.

In a 7-2 decision, the high court let stand Sunday the temporary restraining order from U.S. District Judge William Hoeveler, which was upheld by the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, stopping CNN from broadcasting tapes of telephone conversations between the imprisoned former Panamanian dictator and his lawyers.

"This is a single battle in a long war," said CNN lawyer Floyd Abrams.

CNN will submit the tapes to Hoeveler. Abrams said if the judge refuses to lift the ban after reviewing the tapes, CNN will appeal all the way back to the Supreme Court, if necessary. He said he was "hopeful and confident" of prevailing if the case comes back to the high court.

However, University of Texas law professor Lucas Powe, a specialist in press freedom issues, said the damage has been done.

"Nothing can untie what happened today because the decision today was that CNN must submit to censorship," Powe said. "Whenever the Supreme Court sanctions an erosion in our historically exercised liberties, you can't be certain where an erosion's going to stop."

According to the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, which concentrates on First Amendment issues involving the media, the American public should be very concerned with the court's action.

"We're almost a unique country in the world because we have a First Amendment that protects the press from government censorship," said committee executive director Jane Kirtley. "Prior restraint is nothing more or less than government censorship and I think most people understand that it's very important that the government, with all of its power, not be allowed to stop the press from reporting about matters that are of public interest."

Kirtley added, "There's no question that the prosecution and trial of Noriega are of great public interest. And the fact that the courts would allow defense counsel and the government, acting in concert, to in effect orchestrate the media coverage of this very important event is something that ought to cause anyone great concern."

Nephew of Saudi Arabian consul arrested in L.A.

United Press International

LOS ANGELES — The nephew of the Saudi Arabian Consul General in Los Angeles has been arrested for vehicular manslaughter in the hit-and-run death of an elderly pedestrian on the westside, authorities said Sunday.

Trad Esmat Nazer, 20, surrendered at the West Los Angeles station about 2 1/2 hours after the accident that killed a 73-year-old woman as she crossed Wilshire Boulevard at Manning Avenue about 11:15 p.m. Friday, Officer Rodger Burton said.

When he surrendered, Nazer was accompanied by his uncle, Saudi Arabian Consul General Hassan Nazer, Burton said. Police said there were no passengers in Nazer's car at the time of the accident.

The victim, whose name was withheld until relatives could be notified, was walking across Wilshire Boulevard when she was hit by a late model red Mustang, customized with a black leather bra on its front and a spoiler on the back, detective Bob Ockey said.

Many medicines treat hypertension

DEAR DR. GOTT: Once a patient has been diagnosed with hypertension, how does a physician go about prescribing the correct medication for control? I've been on numerous samples, all of which produce a severe reaction such as dizzy spells, a red flush, fatigue, etc. Is trial and error the only answer?

DEAR READER: To a large extent, the treatment of hypertension is a trial-and-error procedure. There are many drugs available for this purpose; most doctors have their favorites and, depending on the severity of the high blood pressure, will use one or another medicine with which they are familiar. To date, there is no one preferred treatment that is universally accepted for this common ailment.

Some physicians choose to treat mild hypertension with diet, exercise and diuretics, kidney-stimulants that reduce excess body fluids and, as a secondary effect, lower blood pressure. Such drugs include hydrochlorothiazide, Hygroton, Maxzide, Dyasid and others.

For moderate hypertension, more doctors are turning to beta-blockers (such as Inderal and atenolol) or to calcium-channel blockers (such as Calan and Isoptin). Recent studies have shown that angiotensin-converting enzyme inhibitors (such as Captopril, Zestril and Prinivil), are effective and safe, especially if the hypertension is complicated by a weak heart action.

Severe hypertension may require in-hospital control with potent intravenous drugs (such as nitroprusside), followed by one of the above compounds, alone or in combination with diuretics, for out-patient management.

Other useful drugs for moderate-to-severe hypertension include methyldopa (Aldomet), hydralazine (Apresoline) and reserpine (Serpasil).

WIN AT BRIDGE

Bridge game section with a hand analysis. Text includes: 'Look what happened here. West doubled, but East had all the trumps. Should that have been a surprise to South? Probably not. Experienced players know that a defender will sometimes double when he knows his partner must hold a trump stack. He played dummy's club 10 at trick one, winning the trick. Declarer could now guarantee his contract by leading the heart nine from dummy. If East played low, so should South. The only way that South could now lose his doubled contract would be if East got on lead with unusual trump length and came through the king of diamonds. Instead of leading the heart nine, declarer played a heart back to his ace, expecting the doubler to hold a trump trick. When West showed out, South was dead in the water. He played a club to dummy's king and led the heart nine. East covered, won the next heart trick and played a diamond. Declarer went up with the king; West won the ace and tried to cash the Q-J. Declarer ruffed the third diamond and now had no choice except to ruff a good club, draw East's last trump and then try the spade finesse. No dice. Down one. West's offside double should have warned declarer. Notice that letting the heart nine ride at trick two cannot lose the contract. If West wins the queen or 10, the A-K will subsequently pick up the suit. Declarer can then pitch two diamonds from dummy on the A-Q of clubs, and give up a diamond and a spade to make the doubled contract. (C)1990. NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.'
