NATION IN BRIEF

Food Leads Soaring

Wholesale Prices

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Wholesale prices soared 1.3 percent in April as the Labor Department said today.

On an annual basis, that is a 15.8 percent advance — more than double the administration's 6.75 to 7 percent projection for inflation in 1978.

Rapidly climbing food costs were again a major problem last month, advancing at an annual rate of 23.8 percent. But unlike past months, the nonfood sector also registered a sharp gain.

GOP: Carter Means 'Disaster'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senate Republicans, in a unanimous attack on the administration's military and foreign policies, warn that President Carter may be leading the country to disaster.

In a 30-page statement released Wednesday, all 30 GOP senators charged that Carter's policies are inept and have allowed U.S. strength to decline in relation to the Soviet Union.

Carter's policies, they said, are "compromising America's security and, if continued, could lead to disaster."

Sun Day Called Success

By United Press International

Sun Day is over and the consensus is it was a huge success — there were trumpet fanfares at sunrise services, solar-powered rock concerts, dancing and singing and a lot of people learned the possibilities the sun's power offers from the speeches and displays at various celebrations.

Tens of thousands of people — some braving snow in New Mexico and fog in South Carolina and California — turned out from Maine to Hawaii Wednesday to celebrate the dawn of the solar age. Even President Carter joined in and announced a $100 million increase in the federal solar budget for next year.

April Car Sales Record

DETROIT (UPI) — Domestic car sales climbed to record heights in April with the Big Four auto companies reporting combined sales of 882,940 units — a 9.3 percent increase over last year.

The month's total topped the old record of 852,112 passenger cars sold in April 1973 by less than 1 percent. There were 25 business days in both years.

Kent State Remembers

KENT, Ohio (UPI) — Eight years ago today a frightened band of National Guardsmen faced a rowdy group of protesters on the rolling lawns of Kent State University. There was a 15-second barrage of gunfire. Four students fell dead and the reverberations were heard around the nation.

Students, faculty and remnants of the anti-war movement began gathering today to mark the eighth anniversary of the shootings. Classes were canceled on the anniversary for the first time since the shootings.

To Examine Garbage Disposal Plans

Consultant $$$ Sought From Seminole

Will resources including metals and scrap recovered from garbage and trash someday in Seminole County?

Or will heat and fuel be captured from the solid waste?

The Council of Local Governments in Seminole County at a meeting in Casselberry Wednesday agreed to recommend to the county commissioners that it hire a consultant and resource recovery after a year of looking at the problem for which the state has mandated that Seminole have a plan prepared by June, 1979. The subcommittee is composed of city planners and engineers from Seminole's seven cities and county Public Works Director Jack Schuler.

The original recommendation came from the council's solid waste committee, which made a recommendation to the county commissioners that it hire a consultant and resource recovery after a year of looking at the problem for which the state has mandated that Seminole have a plan prepared by June, 1979. The subcommittee is composed of city planners and engineers from Seminole's seven cities and county Public Works Director Jack Schuler.

Schuler said the county has budgeted $10,000 for the consultant and is willing to hire a consultant. The scope of the work to be undertaken includes: advantages and disadvantages of shredding refuse and garbage; separation of resources; refuse derived fuel, incineration and heat recovery and identification of the feasibility of each.

The consultant will also look at transportation problems, including of each alternative and estimate of implementing such alternative, method of financing, studies required for each alternative, tentative implementation schedule and the environmental impact of each alternative.

Waste Water Authority Wins Panel's Approval

By DONNA BYRNE
Herald Staff Writer

The Council of Local Governments in Seminole County Friday night voted to endorse legislation to create a South Orange-Winter Springs Water Treatment Authority and named the county commission to administer the authority.

Asked by Council exactly what the legislation is, French said that the major objection is "verbiage," adding that County Attorney Harry Stewart questions the legality of the transmission authority being called a "district."

"Urged to recommend that Stewart and McIntosh meet to settle that minor difference, French added that he and his colleagues also object to the weighted vote in the legislation.

The proposed legislation calls for the five governments to be assigned votes according to the amount of sewage to go through the transmission line.

French said it is the possibility that one or two entities could control the authority through the weighted vote," said French.

However, Winter Springs Mayor Troy Pland said from the audience, and it is apparent that the document has not been read, that the transmission line would be controlled by three entities.

"That legislation also requires that three entities vote favorably for any issue to be approved," said Pland.

At some future time," said Pland, "Casselberry and Winter Springs will have the majority vote on the authority because it will be sending the most raw sewage to the plant of the five entities."

"I am in support of the authority, but the thing got a little complex," said French.

"I consider a favor and would like to be able to tell the delegation about the support," said French.

French said that he and his colleagues voted to support the authority through the weighted vote," said French.

Losing At Our Own Game

Many an average American this morning climbed out of a bed fitted with sheets and pillow cases made in Korea, dressed in a suit or dress made in Hong Kong, put on shoes made in Italy, ate breakfast consisting of coffee from Brazil or Uganda and had from Denmark on plates and utensils made in Taiwan.

This person watched the morning newscast on a Japanese-made television set and drove to work in a German car powered by fuel from Saudi Arabia.

The eggs and toast at breakfast came from U.S. sources.

We need not elaborate on the economic implications of this altogether-plausible scenario.

And surely this was on the list of topics as President Carter and Japan Prime Minister Fukuda met this week.

The United States is no longer the world's pocket-sitting producer of industrial goods as was the case during decades past; no more do our factories meet our needs and those of others abroad.

The "shrewd Yankee trader" whose goods were superior in price and quality is simply being ousted here and elsewhere.

We are becoming a nation of consumers instead of producers and the proof of this is in the fact that last year we purchased abroad about $30 billion more in goods and services than we sold.

And the trend is discouraging because our trade deficit in 1976 was less than $8 billion.

The inexorable laws of economics impose a heavy penalty on us for our increasing consumption and our declining production:

Last summer, 4,000 steelworkers in Fontana, Calif., had their jobs wiped out by imports. And the small town of Herkimer, N.Y. (population 6,000), is facing economic disaster after a Westinghouse color television tube plant employing 1,200 persons was closed by cheaper Japanese TV imports.

More than 70,000 U.S. workers have lost their jobs in the shoe industry during the last eight years because U.S. consumers bought cheaper shoes from abroad. The list of other industries similarly afflicted by foreign competition is a long one.

President Carter has properly resisted increasing pressures to protect threatened U.S. industries through high tariff walls. He has attempted to meet this admittedly difficult problem by improvising and temporizing — persuading foreign nations to reduce their exports and cushioning the competitive impact of cheaper imports by special federal grants to affected industries and workers.

But these measures are palliatives that treat symptoms rather than causes.

To be sure, there are other reasons, including foreign tariffs against U.S. goods that should be removed, but inflation is the biggest problem underlying our declining trade and technology.

If we can get a handle on government spending, and if U.S. workers, whose productivity rates are declining in relation to foreign workers, can increase their output, we can resume our traditional leadership in world trade.

Admittedly, there are two big ifs, but at least we are reassured that our economic problems are still solvable; the challenge is not yet beyond us.

And because this is a national problem, it seems clear we must look to Washington for national leadership, especially in controlling inflation.

But given Mr. Carter's leadership, we're still faced with an inflated $64 billion question.

ANGLE-WALTERS About 'Off-Duty' Campaigns

WASHINGTON — The music is the same; only the lyrics have been changed. Once again, a member of Congress has been accused of improperly using his services of his legislative staff in a political campaign.

In every even-numbered election year, scores of such controversies erupt all across the nation. The most recent incident occurred in Tampa, where Democrats try to decide a bitterly contested Senate seat.

The principal culprits are Rep. Robert Krueger, D-Tex., seeking to move up from his House seat, and Joe Christie, the state's former insurance commissioner. The winner earns the right to challenge Sen. John G. Tower, R-Tex., in the general election this autumn.

After comparing House payroll records with Krueger's campaign, Gerry Morrissey, a public defender, identified 11 individuals who apparently performed political tasks in Krueger's campaign while employed on his congressional staff.

The most embarrassing case involved Krueger's campaign manager, Gerry Morrissey, who in 1977 was a $5,000-a-year administrative assistant in Krueger's Texas district office.

When he first heard of Christie's research, Krueger claimed that Morrissey "was on the campaign staff and all the time he was working on my campaign I paid him $1,000 a month," he said.

After considerable haggling and hailing, a Krueger spokesman came up with still another explanation: "Morrissey got in substantial time in the campaign in July, but he also put in 40 hours a week in the congressional district office."

When confronted with official payroll records showing that Morrissey had received a congressional salary of more than $1,000 from July 1 through July 31, Krueger said "that was a mistake." "It's only a few hours," he was forced to admit, "but it's a few hours."

After considerable haggling and hailing, a Krueger spokesman came up with still another explanation: "Morrissey got in substantial time in the campaign in July, but he also put in 40 hours a week in the congressional district office."

In another case, John E. Wanam, carried on Krueger's congressional payroll as a non-member legislative aide, worked more than $1,000 in unpaid overtime hours during the first six months of 1977, records show. The unpaid overtime amounts corresponded largely to the campaign expenses during the same period.

Less than two weeks after the dispute erupted, Krueger claimed vindication, based on a letter from the House Administration Committee that stated: "When congressional employees are off-duty, they have the same status as any other employee and may expect to be compensated during the same period."

That's the same weak explanation that has been offered by various politicians concerning House paychecks. The problem lies in the definition of "off-duty."

"It's a case of superior feminist efficiency," she assured me diplomatically.

"You go to the bank to cash a check, you stand in line. Right? Then you go grocery shopping and you stand in line. Right?"

"Our eyes tend to see the U.S. as a massive male-dominated society," said Morrissey.

The checker rings up her purchases, catching her by surprise. She has not anticipated the total would appear after the final item.

However, a young matron with whom I recently discussed the matter dismissed me of that theory.

"It's a case of superior feminist efficiency," she assured me diplomatically.

Then, that's when mothers complain to food stores, women could push their carts to the nearest bank and have a teller cash them out.

Slaughters Must Not Be Countenanced

WASHINGTON — Americans were outraged at the news that German SS men in 1945 had laid up captured Americans in a cage, severely tortured them to death and buried them alive in mass graves in Vietnam. They were horrified to hear that their own Special Soldiers had signed up the German men, women and children of My Lai village in Vietnam.

The Kennedy and My Lai massacres were Sunday School outrage, however, compared to the retribution the condemned communists have brought against their former foes in Cambodia. There is short, staggering evidence that the communists, in one horrendous spate of violence, have killed more than 100,000 people in a single month.

The communists were bad guys. "Since the KCP [Communist Party] had not established its control over the country, the party ordered the communists carried out a raid on the area to not allow the people," the spokesman of the officers was before, on the government's behalf, in a speech to the international community of United Nations. "There was no reason for the communists to do this."

After the KCP took power in Cambodia,

"the communists carried out the same kind of attack, but this time it was not to allow the people to live."

Watergate Hurt Detente, Writes Nixon

By United Press International
In the latest installment of Nixon's memoirs, the former president writes that his warm friend, p. with Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev could not overcome the Watergate scandal, which hurt
Nixon's efforts at detente with the Soviet Union.

In the fifth installment of his memories, today in The Chicago Tribune and other papers, Nixon focuses on detente and his summit meetings with Soviet leaders. "RN:
The Memoirs of Richard Nixon" will be published in book form June 1.

Nixon writes that during the 1974 summit talks in the Soviet Union his biggest fight was in Washington, not Moscow, because of the domestic anti-detente forces, and that "Watergate had badly damaged my ability to defend, or at least to circuitous, my position."

"After our drive, he said to me,
'This is an excellent automobile.
It holds the road very well.' You are an excellent driver," I replied.

"Diplomacy is not always an easy art."
