

CAMPBELL SAYS ALL FED UP WITH CAMERAMEN

British Racing Ace Declares He Will Return Next Season

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—(AP)—Maxim Campbell, racing star who admits the most he got out of doing 245.73 miles an hour in his Bluebird car "leaves" for England today to escape the crowds, reporters and especially cameramen.

"Ever since I left England I've had to pose so many times I'm almost sick of it," Campbell said.

"When I landed cameramen greeted me with a click, click, click. During my trial and before and after the test it was 'Smile, won't you?'"

In Washington cameramen met at the train and trailed all day, in the White House and everywhere. "I was a shining star," Campbell said. "All day yesterday it was the same thing."

"I'll be glad to get home. But I suppose cameramen will greet me."

Yesterday the speed king was too busy to have a reception at the hall. He had his automobile to ship, a talking movie to make, and he got some rest, but not much.

He reiterated that he would be back to make another world's speed record in 1934.

Booth probably within a year he's been setting world records for five years and intends to continue trying for others for several years yet.

He expects to go 300 miles an hour when he comes back after a week in England in his Bluebird which he terms an old car.

"Reasons, that's the practical side of my record-making," he said. "Thirty years ago an automobile traveling 40 miles an hour would scarcely stay on the road. Now look at it, 250 and no trouble. When we built the first motor car the Bluebird in 1924 it had 480 horsepower. The present model of the same design and type had 1450 horsepower."

They that used to blow for him at 150 miles an hour are also as good as dead after speed of 250 miles an hour as before.

"There's the body and every other part. Efficiency, that's the main general efficiency. We learn every day and I learned a lot in my 244 miles an hour."

Campbell came to New York from Washington in an airplane. It averaged 110 miles an hour. He said he thought he would never reach the end of the flight.

Although he was a flier before he was an automobile racer, he said planes to him are considerable of a bore.

TURF MAY LOSE HIM

RAY WORKMAN

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Feb. 13.—Sonny Workman, the premier jockey of the Cornelius Whitney stable, may come back as a race rider after sustaining a broken ankle in a fall last week, but horsemen who know the young man well are doubting it.

Workman was tossed from the saddle of W. B. Kilmer's Sunbird in the two-year-old race shortly after the start, and he lay in the mud almost helpless trying to rub his injured right leg until an ambulance was sent to pick him up. He was rushed off to the hospital, where physicians found what they call a comparatively simple fracture of the right leg just above the ankle.

To physicians the fracture may be a simple one, but among horsemen it is regarded as most serious. Any place like that the ankle and there might be some hope for the continuance of a jockey's career even without any other considerations, but there is the additional fact that while waiting for the ankle to mend Workman will take on more weight than he will ever be able to shed.

The boy is a growing chap, who even now finds it hard to make 110 pounds in order to fulfill the terms of his contract with the Whitney stable, which calls for a salary of $25,000 a season. Each year he has grown heavier, and it has become necessary for him to go through arduous sessions of road work daily to keep within the prescribed weight limit. Last year it was thought that with his fondness for good food, Workman would not himself fight out of the saddle, but now, under enforced "diets" in a hospital, it is only natural to expect that weight will pile on quickly.

Absent from the question of increased poundage, the injury in the right leg is at the worst possible location for anyone whose business it is to stick feet into stirrups and bear down as jockeys have to do in the course of a horse race. It is at the ankle that the most pressure is brought to bear, not to mention what the friction against the iron means to a tender spot.

Johnny Callahan, the jockey now retired, said that a break above the ankle would not be nearly so dangerous as a fractured ankle.

"A race rider needs two strong feet and two strong hands," said Callahan. "Just an injured ankle would hamper a rider ever afterward, even if mended satisfactorily from the standpoint of physicians, say, would a broken wrist be any stronger than a fracture up on the arm?"

Despite his hope the favorable outlook for Workman his friends and admirers are hoping for the best. "A natural rider, with strong hands and driving power and a fine eye," recalling the late Snapper Garrison is intensely Sonny had a big following. He always gave the public a ride, and there has never been the slightest suggestion of suspicion concerning his efforts.

He turned to fame almost overnight five years ago when Freddie Hopkins, stable trainer for the Whitney stable, picked him up around the Baltimore track. At that time Workman was a devil-may-care youngster who, while he certainly has the knack of making money for himself, though he has certainly become a father-figure to many.

He weighs 125 pounds then

2 FARRELL BOYS ARE ALL SET FOR DANN AND AYTON

Win Exhibition Match On Eve Of Tourney At Mount Plymouth

ST. AUGUSTINE, Feb. 12.—Johnny and Jimmy Farrell, the local professional combination that has but one draw to mar its team supremacy record in the past four years, left yesterday for Mount Plymouth, where they were to meet Carl Morris Dunn, brilliant amateur, and Laurie Ayton, Chicago pro, in a preliminary match to the exhibition here Sunday when the Farrells will take strokes with Gene Sarazen and Jack Cawsey, Jacksonville municipal pro.

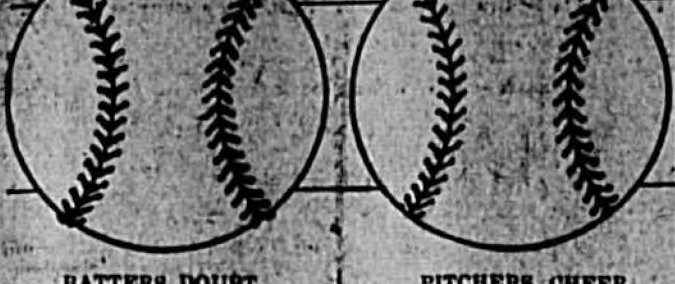

In the last exhibition match played by the Farrells they were Jimmy Thompson and Dave Stearns, who were defeated by the Farrells with Johnny having a return of his old putting prowess that made it very interesting. The Farrells from coming to grief at the hands of the two Ormond experts.

Whatever the outcome in today's match, the fact remains that for the past four years the Farrell combination has been unbeatable on the home course. On one occasion, two years ago, they and Armour tied the local pair.

Both Johnny and Jimmy have been playing finer golf here this season than during any other year. Johnny's assaults upon past have been almost daily occurrences and his many supporters see in his play this year a return to the form that won him his national open title in 1928 at the expense of none other than Bobby Jones. He is hitting his tee shots with greater ease and, as a result, getting better distance. Now, with the return of his putting eye, his game presents a mighty formidable obstacle to any professional in the game.

However, Sarazen, probably one of the most spectacular players in the professional game by virtue of his tendency to take chances has a huge following who believe that the smart little Italian is the hardest hitter of them all. Tanned with Jack Cawsey, he should be a threat on every hole every shot. Cawsey is a mighty hitter himself and, having recovered from a serious illness, he is giving to show the form that his fellow townsmen believe will make him a headliner in the national tournament this summer.

THE NEW BALL OF THE YEAR

BATTERS DOUBT
BABE RUTH—The new ball won't trouble me. Instead of knocking the apple one block outside the ball parks I may average only half a block. But the birds who have just been getting their hits outside the grounds may find it a little tougher this season when their drives may often topple inside the park where they can be caught.

PITCHERS CHEER
WAITE HOYT—The heavier, raised stitching on the new ball seems bound to give the pitcher a better grip on the ball and a better "break" than he surely deserves these days. Better control should help a lot. It's a perfectly normal, reasonable change. Not a radical one. Babe Ruth made the last radical change in baseball.

DAZZY VANCE—It's mostly guess work figuring the effect of the new ball on pitching, but it should help a lot. My guess is that more strike outs will replace those "cheap" home runs that used to break up well pitched ball games. It's a mighty good, logical change. The extra hop on the "high hard one" and better break on the curve should fool the batter much oftener on that third strike.

The degree of moral strength with which we emerge from this period," he said, "will be determined by whether individuals and local communities continue to meet their responsibilities."

The country can take courage and pride in the manner in which organizations for relief, and for the provision of employment have sprung up over the nation, he said.

"Never before in a great depression has there been so ardent a protection against distress; never before has there been so little social disorder; never before has there been such an outpouring of the spirit of self-sacrifice and service."

President Hoover said the "in-"

The Benefits Of Hard Work

Sweet are the uses of adversity... of that statement is being fully demonstrated... in most parts of the country at the present time. Not all effects of depression are deplorable. Not all results are unhappy. There are many lessons learned for the good of humanity.

Recent lean years have taught Sanford farmers how to raise excellent crops with but a small part of the cost which seemed necessary in previous years. The habit of paying debts has shown our growers the wisdom of economy and self-financing, of doing the work themselves instead of hiring someone else to do it for them.

Many a business man has learned to work during the past few years where he had formerly been in danger of retiring in middle life. He has discovered many new sales methods and means of economizing in the handling of his goods. He has systematized his work so that he himself can supervise a larger part of it, and materially reduce his operating expenses. When business picks up it is a safe bet that his margin of profit will be considerably larger than in the old days.

The Christian Science Monitor has listed a number of other benefits which can be attributed to the depression, not the least of which has been the tremendous increase in reading throughout the whole country as indicated by an announcement of figures by the Philadelphia Public Library. Readers who attended the library during 1930 increased 429,304 over the previous year.

Obviously this increase in reading has resulted from an increase in unemployment. Men and women who had no work to do went to the library. The motivating cause may have been to kill time, but more than likely a larger proportion sought technical books which might better prepare them for positions once they found them. Many of them undoubtedly look advantage of the opportunity of a search for knowledge.

The Monitor also points out that Bible publishing houses declare that their sales showed a big increase in 1930 over 1929 and attribute to this fact the reason that adversity of ten points out to men their need of spiritual enlightenment and encouragement. And the Monitor quotes from Solomon to show that this tendency can have nothing but a good result:

Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding. For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold.

Who's The Goat?

With the threat of a suit just announced, the Butler-Vanderbilt-Mussolini incident continues to sputter, despite the withdrawal of court martial proceedings. We now have three versions, all quite separate and distinct, of the same hit-and-run episode.

General Butler told the story in a humorous vein at a dinner in Philadelphia, and is said to have received his information from Vanderbilt. According to the Marine, Mussolini was driving an automobile with an American (presumably Vanderbilt) for a companion when he suddenly hit a child. He drove on and when his companion remonstrated, Mussolini replied: "What is one life in the affairs of a state?"

Vanderbilt's version of the incident varies slightly. He admits he was the companion of Mussolini on the now famous ride, and also that Mussolini was driving when the car hit a child, but he contends that the Premier's remark was: "Never look back, Vanderbilt; always look ahead in life."

From Rome comes another statement to the effect that Mussolini has never taken an auto tour with any American, much less Vanderbilt, that he has never struck any child on any of his drives, and that he never made either of the above remarks attributed to him. He admitted, however, that he once ran over and killed a dog.

So here we have the rumor in a nutshell. Mussolini was out driving one time when he suddenly ran over a dog and killed it. Someone told the story to Vanderbilt, but made it a better story by changing the dog into a child. Vanderbilt improved upon it somewhat by making himself a passenger at the time of the incident, and by attributing a remark to Mussolini to lend truth to the story. Naturally Mussolini said something. When Butler passed the story on he told it essentially as he had heard it only he altered the already fictitious remark slightly to make it illustrate a point in his story.

The only mystery yet to be solved in the entire affair is: "Who is the goat of this incident?" Mussolini brought the matter to the attention of the entire world by demanding an apology. Butler narrowly averted court martial and was remanded for repeating derogatory rumors. And Vanderbilt? Well, it seems that Vanderbilt should devote himself to fiction writing rather than newspaper work.

TELLING THE WORLD

THE TRUTH AT LAST

Edgar Lee Masters has just done for Abraham Lincoln what Rupert Hughes did for George Washington. He claims Honest Abe was a lazy, clumsy, no-good, well. He even intimates he was something of a gold digger too.

Mr. Masters says that after living sixty-one years in the Lincoln country he got pretty sick of hearing the myth that Lincoln was honest, industrious and a man of the people. So he decided to give him the truth.

Those things happen every once in a while, especially when an author gets out a new book. We don't doubt that seventy years from now some upstart author will blast the Calvin myth like this.

up the poles strike at all. He broke up the firemen's ball. I've dug up the real facts and here they are:

It seems back in 1913 (that's eighty-one years ago) the Boston Fire Department decided to have a social evening at their rented Mechanics Hall and put on a firemen's ball. That night every fireman's ball, that night every fireman's ball, that night every fireman's ball, that night every fireman's ball, that night every fireman's ball.

These are the facts. But Coolege has been built up into a myth. A myth which means that he is a man of the people.

WORLD

By F. W. ...

The late Cardinal Mercier... said something... of the Archbishop of... belongs to the... rule, and you believe in it... is born to obey. This... of conversation had... to ecclesiastical... men were discussing... position of Flanders in... The cardinal, being a... that is to say, of... naturally took the... that vexing question... Belgium as long as... M. Max, Mayor of... said the other day in... that the Flemish... not only the fate of... Government, but the... of Belgium.

Harsh and cruel as Cardinal Mercier's words may have been, they contain a good deal of truth. The Flemish people are indeed a people that obeys the dictates of the French minority in Belgium. The Flemings have a pronounced... directly backward, Cardinal Mercier was not far wrong.

But how did they get that way? At one time Flanders certainly was in the vanguard of European civilization. The Dutch, absolutely the same race as the Flemings, speaking the same language, occupy a cultural position in the world at large, second in no other race on earth. Who knows the Flemings—or, to call them by their right name, the Southern Dutch—why have they slipped back, or what is holding them back from reaching a cultural level somewhat equal to that of the Northern Dutch, the Hollanders?

The answer is: Belgium. This state which was created a hundred years ago by the Great Powers lumped under one central administration two peoples of entirely different characteristics: the male Flemings and the female Walloons. The French King Louis Philippe commented to the effecting up of a Belgium Kingdom under British pressure, although he and his government had all agreed to have the Southern Netherlands joined to France. If they could not have their wish in 1830, they could prepare for the day of fiction.

To this end the French element in Belgium, backed by France, began a systematic campaign to undermine Flemish culture with the object of eradicating it entirely in course of time. Holland should have upheld Dutch culture in Flanders, but Holland in no match for France in a military sense. So Holland kept aloof, practically abandoning some million of her subjects to their fate.

Women is supreme in the modern world. She always was, as a matter of fact, ever since the episode in the Garden of Eden. But her supremacy has never been more clearly recognized than in the latter part of the nineteenth century. There are few left to-day in Vienna who have not been forced to start an organization "for the emancipation of man," a society for the protection of the rights of men. It is to be hoped that this club will do a lot of good and will not confine its activities to the Austrian capital. Nothing is known of that society except that it was started. But the fact in itself that the need of such a society had made itself felt shows to what a level we men had sunk and to what extent the woman rule the roost in the world.

the world will not start on the upgrade until women are put in their proper place and men are restored in all their political and civic rights and prerogatives. Why this extensive... over masculine rights? Simply for this reason he explained: "Women are nursing militant anti-man... In Austria there is another society, a much older, much stronger and better organized society consisting of women, which places itself on the standpoint that they are the elect of the earth. Man has made a mess of politics, of economics, of morals and of... After this no more men as chiefs of state, ministers, members of parliament, mayors of towns, voters—only women should be eligible. The day of man is over!"

So that's the ticket. Just as well to know who started this war, I fear it is to be more likely that a few hundred thousand... will rise in indignation at the threat to their position of lords of creation—and then promptly all down again. That's the way we are. Backward... of ignorance and... of... of...

SHOULD THE CHILDREN EAT IT?

PARENTS, particularly mothers, are paying a lot of attention to children's diet these days. For it is far more economical and pleasant to have a child well by feeding him correctly than by nursing and doctoring him back to health.

Of course the doctor should be consulted regarding what a child should eat and what he should not eat. But do you realize that the leading manufacturers of food now seek the advice and approval of the leading nutritional authorities in the country, relative to the claims they make for their products in their advertising?

In other words, food advertisements are reliable sources of information regarding diet. They are based upon the results of the latest approved scientific discoveries about vitamins, minerals and nutrients, in relation to vigorous bodies, clear complexion, sound teeth and generally sound systems.

So read those advertisements carefully. Consult your doctor about them. Very often the advertising makes you do this because it is the only thing that makes you read those advertisements, when you have no other choice.
