He quite frankly admits that his efforts might "properly be classified as phamphleteering, for I am concerned with only one thing; namely, to drive home, a mercage."

"It's Up To Us" sets forth a series of questions which Warburg believes the average citizen abould ask and answer concerning the "New Deal." They cover the fields of agriculture, money and banking, industry, taxes and foreign trade. To each he gives his toys answer. In agriculture, for example, he believes we must "remedy the basic difficulty by attempting to regain some of our lost foreign markets, and by adjusting our production to demand, not by government manipulation, but by enlightening our agricultural producers to the actualities of supply and
