Tax Evasion

Having decided against the advisability of levying a municipal sales tax in order to increase necessary operating revenues, the powers that be in Miami are now planning to promote a "Pay Your Taxes" campaign. It is disclosed that the City of Miami has more than nine million dollars in delinquent taxes on its books, an amount sufficient, if collected, to make unnecessary any additional tax levies.

No doubt what is true in Miami is equally true in many other Florida municipalities. It has become to a large extent unfashionable to pay taxes, and even those who are in a position to pay refuse to do so. Just why it is any more moral or less criminal to dodge or evade city taxes than federal income taxes is difficult to explain and yet the very people that allow their real estate taxes to go unpaid year after year complain the loudest against those "malefactors of great wealth" who have evaded income taxes.

The point is that everyone who is able ought to pay all the taxes levied against him, and the governing authorities ought to see to it that all such taxes are collected. For it is just as sure as death that those who do not pay their taxes simply make the load which others have to bear all the heavier. The operating expenses of a city require certain fixed sums and if half the property owners do not pay their taxes, the assessments have to be doubled against those who do.

We do not believe that widows and orphans ought to be driven from their homes because of an inability to pay taxes, nor do we think it just to deprive any man of his property who during a temporary emergency can demonstrate his incapacity to pay, but we are convinced that in some instances comparatively wealthy persons are taking advantage of official hesitancy to enforce collections in order to escape their proper responsibility to the city's financial support.

Cases such as these should not be allowed to increase the burdens of the honest taxpayer.

Armament Business Booms

Not all war talk is based on the coronation of the new Chinese emperor of Manchukuo, German Hitlerism, or the proposed restoration of the Hapsburgs in Austria. Some facts have an even greater significance when it comes to indicating which way the wind blows. The nations of Europe are buying munitions, and the ingredients of munitions.

The magazine Fortune, pointing out in the current issue that it cost $25,000 for each soldier killed in the World War, says that shipments through the Panama Canal of Chilean nitrate, from which gunpowder is made, have increased from 2,238 tons in January of 1933 to 146,167 tons during January of this year. The shipments were under blind sailing orders from the Azores where they would be directed to their final destination.

Other important shipments through the Panama Canal have included scrap iron, steel, lead, and cotton, in ever increasing quantities from the United States for Japan. It is from such materials as these that artillery pieces, rifles, and ammunition, are made. Automobiles, worn out on American highways, find their way ultimately to junk yards where sooner or later they are huddled up, stored on freighters, and shipped to Japan, where they are made into 3 inch guns, and hand grenades.

Fortune relates interesting details of the business associations and political activities of some of the world's leading munitions makers. It recalls that the famous German Krupp works in its zeal for profits did not hesitate to sell German guns to Russian soldiers with which to kill German soldiers at the outbreak of the World War, and until the German government finally put a stop to it. The technique of munitions salesmanship is illustrated by Sir Basil Zaharoff, who once sold Greece a submarine, and then because Greece had bought one, succeeded in compelling Turkey to buy two.

Schnelder-Creusot, a French corporation, includes on its board of directors, not only Frenchmen, but also Germans, Czechs, Poles, and others who meet to discuss the armament problems of the world and to arrange with financiers loans to different countries so that armaments can be bought. There is no hesitancy on the part of the French corporation to sell guns to Germany if the funds can be provided.

Another company, the Comite des Forges, does a big business in munitions. In France it is controlled by Francois de Wendel, in Germany it is controlled by another branch of the same family. But in Germany the family is known as von Wendel. They have only one friend, profits; only one enemy, peace.

SANFORD, TWENTY YEARS AGO

Sanford Lodge of Elks held a most interesting meeting on Wednesday night, the same being the time for the annual election of officers. His new names were proposed for membership and the total will soon reach the 200 mark. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: R. L. Peck, exalted ruler; C. O. McLaughlin, esteemed leading knight; J. F. Karnatz, esteemed loyal knight; Edward Rourke, tyler; O. L. Taylor, secretary; L. P. McCuller, treasurer; and B. Maxwell, trustee.

THE GROWTH OF COLLECTIVISM
By Mark Sullivan

With due caution about flinging superlatives before the eyes of a people already too much agitated by events, it must nevertheless be said that by far the most important thing going on in the world is the attempt and the considerable degree of progress of a group of young radicals in carrying the United States toward a collectivist form of government and social organization.

What is taking place is, I am satisfied, not the conscious intention or the wish of President Roosevelt. The steps which constitute the progress toward collectivism are not initiated or devised by a group within the Administration who call themselves liberals and are called by others radicals. The term "radicals" is abundantly justified, for there could be nothing more far-reaching than the objective they are intent upon. They understand what is called the "technique of revolution" and they are intent on bringing one about in America.

The latest step is being attempted through a bill which is called a measure to regulate stock exchanges. So far as the measure lays down rules for control of the Stock Exchange it is not revolutionary. It is not even found too drastic by many who resent the shocking investment and other financial scandals of recent years and the part that stock manipulation had in them.

The means by which the revolution is being attempted lies in the parts of the measure which goes far afield from the Stock Exchange. These parts of the bill can hardly be interpreted by any well informed person except as an attempt, subtle and indirect, but thoroughly effective, to bring about in the whole of American industry, big and little, including farming, what the radicals call "planned economy." "Planned economy" is a gentle and alluring phrase devised by the intellectuals who understand Tolstoy's dilemma that a principal concern of statesmen is to devise new words for institutions which, under their familiar names, would be odious to the public. "Planned economy" is the same thing as collectivism, and collectivism is what the radicals in the Administration are moving toward.

The provisions in the Stock Exchange control bill which would facilitate planned economy are those which assert control over Stock Exchanges, but over ordinary industrial corporations, of any size, and over their officers, directors and stockholders, no provision is made by the bill, and its effect would hardly be recognized by any one unless he was familiar with the "planned economy" objective of the radicals. One provision is that no corporation should be allowed to issue stock to be registered on the exchange unless the "application for registration" complies with the "rules and regulations" made by the government commission, which is to administer the act. What "rules and regulations" might be made by the commission is a matter within their own discretion.

This power to prevent a corporation from issuing new securities must be read in connection with the "rules and regulations" of the "planned economy." The principle is that the government shall have a monopoly of the control and disposition of capital. A collateral principle is that no owner of capital shall be permitted to use it except in such ways as the government passes upon and permits. Concretely, a shoe manufacturer, for example, shall not be permitted to enlarge his factory, even though he uses his own capital, until after getting permission from the government. The case of those who manufacture specifically cited by the potential planners in the Administration. They say there is already capacity to make more shoes than the country normally consumes, and they proposed to forbid increase of plants until after they judge that the country needs more shoes than existing plants can provide. Their intention is the same with respect to every other kind of manufacture—concrete, steel rails, mouth organs, mouse traps or what not.

The control over the issue of new securities proposed in the Stock Exchange control bill is obviously to be one of the means of preventing creation of new plants. The same intention underlies provisions in the securities act, passed last year. The fundamental long-range aim of both is not merely to regulate issues of securities and private in-laws, but to make them impracticable or impossible. The ultimate aim of making private issuance of securities and private lending of capital impracticable is to bring about government monopoly of the whole function of credit. Government monopoly of credit would be government control of ownership of all industry. This would be about all that the "planned economy" is and constitutes the objective of the radicals.

Government monopoly of credit and banking is not the wish of President Roosevelt. He has said so, through Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. "The President would be greatly disappointed if the banks do not perform all the functions that banks are intended to perform." Yet government monopoly of credit and banking is being taken step and step nearer by the Administration. It is being done in several different fields upon the initiative of the radicals.

The divergence between the President's own objectives and those of the radicals is illustrated by one provision of the Stock Exchange control bill to expand the power of the President to prevent any recurrence of the violent deflation of credit, which was at once the cause and the very substance of the depression. Yet the Stock Exchange control bill requires that by next October every bank having loans to brokers on Stock Exchange collateral shall reduce the loans to 40 percent of the market value of the collateral. That proposal, if put in effect at once, would, it is not too much to say, start a violent spasm of deflation and cause the depression to begin again. Every broker and borrower from a bank knows that at the present time the average bank loan to every type of borrower on collateral is closer to 80 percent of the value than to 40. Just how many loans are in the banking phrase, "under water," Wholesale, forced selling of collateral to reduce loans would be just what the depression consisted of. Even though the radicals by restricting loans to brokers and even though it be spread over seven months until October, it would work a serious contraction of credit and of bank money which is the last thing that the President or the country desires.

HITLER REGIME UPHELD AS 1ST YEAR IS ENDED

Goebbels Says Success Beyond Expectation Has Been Met By Economic Policies

LEIPZIG, Germany, Mar. 5.—(AP)—Opening the 700-year-old Leipzig fair, Dr. Joseph Goebbels, Nazi minister of propaganda, yesterday joyously cried "the worst is behind us."

A second grand Nazi offensive against unemployment beginning on Mar. 21 was announced by Goebbels as thousands cheered.

Surveying the Nazi regime, now one-year old, Goebbels told the brilliant assembly, including many foreign diplomats, that Chancellor Hitler's economic policy "had brought success exceeding expectations of the most sanguine optimists, despite the terrible legacy of mismanagement left by the previous regime."

More than 2,000,000 persons, he said, would be added to the previous 2,000,000 for whom work had been found in the past months.

Hitler's first drive against unemployment, begun May 1, 1933, Dr. Goebbels asserted, had reduced unemployment from 6,000,000 to 4,000,000 and the winter relief program, ended yesterday, brought 320,000,000 marks (approximately $120,000,000) in money and goods into circulation.

Bankruptcy decreased 48 percent in 1933, he asserted, and industrial production rose from 38,000,000,000 marks (approximately $14,700,000,000) to 41,000,000,000 marks (about $16,277,000) in 1933.

The key to Nazi success, Goebbels claimed, was Hitler's courage in disregarding orthodox Nazi theories when the occasion demanded. Revealing that the Nazi economic reconstruction process had deviated considerably from original plans, he stated: "We are not rigid doctrinaires. We have attacked every problem in a practical manner with the unshakable conviction we are well on the road to success."

U.S. Trade Body Hits Stock Exchange Bill

WASHINGTON, Mar. 5.—(AP)—The pending Stock Exchange bill was described yesterday by the board of directors of the chamber of Commerce of the United States as "the product of a few inexperienced individuals whose ideas of desirable procedure to arrest evil is to impede or stop legitimate transactions."

"The measure," the chamber said, "is one which would undertake to regulate commerce and industry, the purchase and sale of securities, and the extension of credit, not alone to the detriment of the great mass of investors who purchase or sell listed or unlisted securities."

Expressing belief that Congress will not pass the bill, the chamber said: "The measure is restrictive and prohibitory in character." The directors called the bill an attempt to provide that companies may do business and investors and banks may carry on security dealings "only at the sufferance and pleasure of a bureau of the federal government."

Industry Asked To Reduce Work Hours, Pay Better Salaries

that goes in wages to this group of human beings is steadily increased. Merchants, employers, and investors will in the long run get more benefit from an increased volume of sales.

The President said that a year ago, the day after inauguration day, the nation was suffering and shrinking under an economic pressure so intolerable "that collapse was at hand."

"We have arrived at a day to make our choice," he said. "We made that choice. The American people responded to the call for action with eager enlistment—enlistment in a struggle against ruthless, self-seeking, reckless greed, and economic anarchy. We undertook a lawful constitutional process to reorganize the disintegrating system of production and exchange. The purpose of that reorganization was not only to bring back prosperity, it went far deeper than that. This reorganization must be permanent for all the rest of our lives in that never again will we permit social conditions which permitted vast sections of our population to exist in an un-American way, which permitted the maldistribution of wealth and power."

In conclusion, Mr. Roosevelt said, "The willingness of all elements to enter into the spirit of the New Deal becomes more and more not less evident as it goes on. As an example, I have just received this telegram from Francis M. Law, president of the American Bankers Association:

"On this your first anniversary please allow me on behalf of the country's banks to express our full confidence and sincere desire to cooperate in your courageous efforts to bring about recovery. The banking structure of the country is sound and liquid, and banks have never been in a stronger position to function effectively. Conditions are improved to a point where it is no longer necessary for banks to be superliquid. The definite call is now for banks not to extend loose credits or make improper loans, but for their most sympathetic attitude toward legitimate credit needs, and a recognition of this responsibility is their proper and vital part in the program of recovery."

"Think back exactly one year ago today," the President said: "You know where the banks stood at that time; you know where your own business stood. That telegram is a living illustration of the progress we have made. Let us consolidate our gains and resolve that this consolidation shall be for continued progress, especially the greater happiness and well being of the American people."

Industry's leaders crowded into Washington last night in record numbers for the assembly of code authorities which today began a vital overhauling of NRA's industrial control program.

As President Roosevelt completed the significant address which opened the session, and Hugh S. Johnson with his chief lieutenants finished the reform plans dictated by last week's outpouring of criticism, registrations for the assembly ran so high that it decided to seat an overflow for the initial meeting.

The President spoke at 11 A. M. Eastern time in Constitution hall delivering a highlight review of his first year and pointing the New Deal squarely into the future. He outlined definitely what he wants the NRA and its industries to accomplish.

The number of code authority and trade association committees registered passed the 4250 mark, and Johnson established an unbroken 15-minute rule for all address, and 10 minutes for general discussion, pointing out that there were only 780 minutes of speaking time available. Gope was the informally which last week let the public critics run past their lines and wander from the subject in hand.

The meeting will run through Wednesday to collect "the best advice obtainable from the industries affected." Wednesday night Johnson will go on the air to tell the country of the results of the session. Immediately afterwards the overhauling of codes will begin.

Clearcut definition of what the Administration intends to get done was summed up in five points:

Prevention of price-increasing ahead of wages.

Prevention of industrial or labor control at the expense of the public.

Securing of real compliance.

Protection of labor's legal rights.

Getting all possible re-employment and purchasing power out of NRA's organization.
